

BM 648 .C82 1814
Crooll, Joseph.
The restoration of Israel

Theo. Scoring

ישוע בן מרים הוא המשיח:

THE RESTORATION OF ISRAEL,

BY

R. JOSEPH CROOLL,

TEACHER OF THE HEBREW LANGUAGE IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE, &c.

AND

AN ANSWER,

BY

THOMAS SCOTT,

RECTOR OF ASTON SANDFORD, BUCKS.

LONDON:

Printed by B. R. GOAKMAN:

AT THE LONDON SOCIETY'S OFFICE, CHURCH STREET, SPITALFIELDS;

Sold by

L. B. SEELEY, FLEET STREET, J. HATCHARD, PICCADILLY, AND GALE, CURTIS, & FENNER, PATERNOSTER ROW.

////

1814.

PREFACE.

A CONSIDERABLE time ago, a copy of the book, which I here attempt to refute, was sent to me, by the Committee of the LONDON SOCIETY for promoting Christianity amongst the Jews, with a request that I would answer it. The same was done, as I understood, to a few other persons. Having looked into it, in rather a slight manner, and being fully engaged at the time, I was not at all inclined to undertake the service; thinking, that some other person, more at leisure, would do it in a more adequate and acceptable manner.

But being something less engaged, in the beginning of the present year, I again took up the copy, and read it more attentively; purposing, if not too late, to make some short remarks on particular passages, and communicate them to any one who, I should learn, was preparing an answer.

In attempting this, however, the whole concern appeared to me in a new light; and I perceived that by this work, an opening was given to the zealous friends of Christianity, and cordial friends of the Jews; of bringing the whole subject, in controversy between Christians and Jews, before the publick and the nation of Israel.

I am indeed free to acknowledge, that before I carefully studied Mr. Crooll's statements, I had not well understood the subject: nor had I been aware of half of the objections, current opinions, and traditions, which stand in the way of a Jew, to prevent his embracing Christianity. The arguments adduced, indeed, did not appear either conclusive, or very difficult to be answered: but questions were started on almost every part of the subject, of which I had not previously thought; and, in some instances, I found that a considerable degree of plausibility was given to objections.

It is true, I understood, that the work was not to be published by the London Society, without an answer: but it occurred to me, that if it were not answered, the author might have to say, that he had, in some sense, challenged the Committee and friends of that Society to answer his work, but they were not able; and therefore, that he at length published it himself, as unanswerable: or, at least, that the substance of it would in one form or other be circulated. On enquiry, I could not learn that any one was engaged in preparing an answer: and thus I was led on, step by step, at length to undertake the service; and, after many changes in my plans and arrangements, which have occasioned much delay, the result is presented to the publick in its present form.

I cannot but fear, however, that some Christian friends may question the propriety of publishing such a work, for the sake of answering it: and I am fully aware, that stating plausible objections, without a very satisfactory refutation of them, is, in all ordinary cases, a dangerous measure. But this appears to me, not to be an ordinary case; but one which cogently requires something to be attempted: and I regard it, as a most important opening, to a fair and full investigation of the whole argument, which ought not to be neglected.

In fact, Jews have hitherto kept themselves within certain strong holds, and inaccessible recesses; making occasional incursions against Christianity ; rather than attempted to lead forth their troops into the open field of fair argument : and Christians seem to have been so afraid of offending them, by clearly exhibiting the mysteries of our holy religion ; that they have, as it were, kept the grand things to be contested, in the back ground. But I rejoice, that there is at length a prospect, of the whole subject becoming more generally examined and understood.

It has been the opinion of several learned men, that nothing should be brought forward, in this controversy, except the insulated question, Whether Jesus be, or be not, the promised Messiah ; and that the peculiar doctrines of Christianity, should be kept out of sight. I own, I once was favourable to this idea, but it is manifest from Mr. C.'s work, that these peculiar doctrines, or at least those views of Christianity which are maintained in the Creeds and Articles of our church, form so prominent a part of their objections to the New Testament ; that they are nearly inaccessible to all other arguments : and must remain so, as far as I can perceive, till it is clearly shewn that these doctrines are contained in the Old Testament ; or, are not at all inconsistent with its leading principles. This, therefore, I have attempted: with what success others must decide. Many things, in the management of the argument, will appear to the Christian reader, different from what he was prepared to expect, or approve: as indeed, they are far different from what at first impressed my own mind. But to reason with Jews, on the sole authoritative ground of the Old Testament; concerning Christianity, and its most important doctrines, which we are accustomed to prove almost exclusively from the New Testament; is an undertaking attended with far more difficulties than it may appear to be, to those who never made the trial.

In respect of such Jews, as may be induced to read this work, I can only intreat their candour and attention. I am conscious, before God, of most cordial good-will to the nation, and to every individual of it: but, as I am also deeply convinced of the truth and excellency of Christianity; I do earnestly long and daily pray for their conversion to their own Messiah, and our most gracious Lord and Saviour. I have not indeed, in what I have written, declined to use all my ability, be it what it may: "I know not " to give flattering words;" and in a few instances I have hinted a gentle reprehension. I trust, however, that even Jews will allow me to be a fair, a candid, and a benevolent opponent; and that they will not say, that I have treated them disrespectfully, or with bitterness and severity.

THOMAS SCOTT.

Aston Sandford,

October 4, 1814.

THE RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

BY R. JOSEPH CROOLI,

Teacher of the Hebrew Language in the University of Cambridge

According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I shew unto him marvellous things. Micah vii. 15.

The breaker is come up before them: they have broken up, and have passed through the gate, and are gone out by it; and their king shall pass before them, and the Lord on the head of them. Micah ii. 13.

And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the nations: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed. Isaiah lxi. 9.

Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. 1 Thess. v. 21.

DECLARATION.

IF ever this book should fall into the hand of a Christian the author would beg of him to consider the following observations.

First,—It was written without any design to publish it, and only to satisfy the Author's own opinion, as will be seen in the sequel. Secondly,—It may be said that the author is an enemy to Christians: to banish this idea, the following proof is offered.

It is well known that at the time when the law was given to Israel, all the seventy nations were worshippers of idols. By this way of worship there was no life for the Gentiles to exist in God's world. But the Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works: he commanded to his people Israel to make intercession for all the Gentile world, and also to offer sacrifices for them; and this was done during all the time that Israel dwelt in their own land. And every year on the feast of Tabernacles, 70 young bullocks were offered for the seventy nations of this world, Numb. xxix. 13: the first day 13, the second 12, the third 11, the fourth 10, the fifth 9, the sixth 8, and the seventh day 7.

In the time of Jeremiah the prophet, Nebuchadnezzar came to Jerusalem and took Jeconiah, at that time king, together with the queen, and a great number of the nation, captives, and brought them into Babylon. At the same time, Hananiah, a false prophet, spoke in the name of God; saying, Within the space of two full years, all those that are in captivity in Babylon shall return. Jer. xxviii. 11. The prophet was commanded by God to write an epistle to the captives in Babylon. "And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace. Jer. xxix. 7.

It is well known that Israel never had any greater enemy than Nebuchadnezzar and his people, yet were our forefathers commanded by God to pray for them. But how much more is it our duty to pray for the nations at the present time, in particular for this country, for here we are used well, and treated better than in any other country; here we enjoy ease and security. As for myself in particular, during the time I have resided in this country, I have received a great deal of kindness from both sexes. But the real cause of writing this book was from reading a small tract published by the Committee of the THE LONDON SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIANITY AMONGST THE JEWS; and here I shall quote their own words: "If any doubts should yet remain in the mind of any person sincerely enquiring after truth, upon the heads discussed in this address; or if any new difficulties should present themselves; it would give pleasure to any member of this Committee, to confer personally with such enquirer on the subject,"—No. II. p. 12.

In the beginning of this paragraph, it is said that they have answered almost every thing, and that a Jew has no more to say for himself. Considering these things, I thought I would search, and try to find, if their statement was sufficient for the conviction of a Jew. And after I set to work, I found fresh difficulties, by which it appears to me that they have yet answered nothing; and further, I think that those things which I have advanced in this book, it is impossible for the Committee to answer. All learned Christians will allow a Jew to suggest every difficulty which he thinks it impossible for a Christian to answer; but there are some ignorant Christians, who, as soon as a Jew advances any thing in his own behalf, will immediately say, he blasphemeth. I hope that whoever reads this book will be a learned Christian, and will remember that a learned Committee have sent forth their publications to the Jews, on purpose to see if any Jew has any thing further to say. What difficulties I have found, I have declared in the following pages, and if the Committee are able to answer them, it may be good for both parties.

THE

RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

MESSIAH.—This name is applicable—1. To a king ; —2. To a prophet ;—3. To a high priest. And Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel ; and Elisha the son of Shaphat, of Abel-mehô-lah, shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room. 1 Kings xix. 16. Thou shalt also take the anointing oil, and pour it upon his head, and anoint him. Exod. xxix. 7. Also every one that is made a king is called a Messiah. Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, &c. Isaiah xlv. 1. This title is always given either to a king, to a ruler, or to a judge. Behold thy king cometh unto thee. Zech. ix. 9. Yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Israel. Mic. v. 2. But with righteousness shall he judge the poor. Isaiah xi. 4.

HE IS TO BE ONLY A MAN.—So shall they be my people, and I will be their God, and David my servant shall be king over them. Ezek. xxxvii. 24. But they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them. Jer. xxx. 9. Afterwards shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king. Hos. iii. 5.

HE MUST HAVE BOTH FATHER AND MOTHER.—It is acknowledged by all that the Messiah was to be the Son of David : for this reason Jesus could not be the Messiah ; and if it should be said that his mother was a daughter of David, that will not relieve the objection; for if the daughter of David brings forth a son, he can by no means be called the son of David: for a son by a daughter has lost the very name of a son of David, although the son of his daughter. And they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month, and they declared their pedigrees after their families, by the house of their fathers, but not by the house of their mothers. Numb. i. 18. Here we may observe, that a daughter in Israel has no pedigree of herself, for if the daughter of a priest be married to a man of another tribe, her son will be no priest; and if a daughter of any tribe be married to a priest, and she brings forth a son, he will be a priest; thus the pedigree of a man depends on his father only.

A SAVIOUR—is not the name of the Messiah, but the name of God; for the Messiah himself shall look up to God to be saved. He is just and shall be saved, Zech. ix. 9. Observe the word is וְנוֹשָׁא venousha; the proper sense of the word is, And he shall be saved, but not “to save himself.” And again, For I am the Lord, thy God, thy Saviour. Isaiah xliii. 3. I, even I, am the Lord; and beside me there is no Saviour; ver. 11. And all flesh shall know, that I the Lord am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty one of Jacob. Isaiah xlix. 26. Happy art thou, O Israel; a people saved by the Lord, (Deut. xxxiii. 29.) —but not by the Messiah.

THE SON OF MAN.—Ezekiel the prophet is called by this name, and was called so by God. Jesus also called himself the Son of Man. We shall find it very difficult to settle by what name he ought to be called: for if he is a God, he is no man; and if he is a man, he is no God. Jesus himself never thought of such a thing; therefore he called himself the Son of Man: but had he thought that he was a God, he would have called himself the Son of a woman ; and that would have proved, that no man could have been his father ; but, if any man will contend that he was both God and man, it cannot be true : for we have the following text ; And there is none other, that can shew it before the king, except the gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh. Dan. ii. 11. The heaven, even the heavens are the Lord's : but the earth hath he given to the children of man. Psalm cxv. 16. I think these proofs are sufficient, to shew that he who partakes of flesh and blood, and eats and drinks, can be no god.

FORGIVENESS OF SIN—The Messiah can forgive no sin, but God whose dwelling is not with men, he only can forgive sin. For there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared, and no other. Psalm cxxx. 4. Observe the term, that thou mayest be feared, and no other, and therefore no flesh can forgive sin ; nay, even the Messiah must pray to God : and inasmuch as the Messiah was to be born of a woman, he would consequently partake of flesh and blood, and the nature of his person be formed only like that of another man.

WHEN IS THE MESSIAH TO COME?—According to the belief of Christians, the Messiah is already come ; but for this great point I wish to see Scripture proof ; and where is the proof ? Will you bring forward the prophet Daniel ? this is what you rely upon, and you have nothing else upon which you can rely. I shall quote the passage to shew that it affords no argument in support of Christianity. And after threescore and two weeks shall the Messiah be cut off, but not for himself ; and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary : and the end thereof shall be with a flood ; and to the end of the war desolations are determined. Dan. ix. 26. From this verse, and the 25th, it is an easy matter to prove, that the Messiah was to be cut off after sixty-nine weeks ; that is in the last week, or properly in the last seven years, before the temple was destroyed. But we find that Jesus was cut off more than six weeks, i. e. about thirty-seven years, before the temple was destroyed ; and therefore he could not be the Messiah, but it must mean some other person.

Let us consider for a moment, that the captivity of Babylon was declared by the mouth of the prophet Jeremiah long before the people went into captivity ; he said, There you shall be seventy years, and no longer ; and so it came to pass. But of how much more consequence is the coming of the Messiah. If the seventy weeks are the only passage in the whole of the Old Testament, that points out the coming of the Messiah, ought it not to be as exact as the prophet has declared it ? but here we find the contrary ; for there is a difference of thirty-seven years : therefore Jesus could not be the Messiah.

Again ; if the seventy weeks is the only passage to be found, that points out the coming of the Messiah, why did not one of the Apostles quote it as a clear proof to convince the people by it ? but we do not find, that either Paul or any other brought forward this passage ; therefore they could not have thought of such a thing ; for they knew that it had no reference at all to the Messiah, and on this account did not quote it.

We also read in this verse, that the Messiah shall be cut off, but not for himself : this is not true, for no such thing is to be found in the Hebrew text, for the text has it ve-en-lo, which signifies, “ and not to him,” that is to say, that the Messiah, which means the king, shall be cut off in the last week. And not to him, i. e. he shall have no successor ; by which is pointed out, that there shall be no more kingly power in the Jewish nation ; and this Messiah that was to be cut off was king Agrippa, and so it happened, that in the last week, he and his son Monves were slain by the order of Titus.

Perhaps some people will ask, How came he to be called a Messiah? I have already shewn that a prophet, a high-priest, and a king, are called by the name of Messiah; also every one that is called a king is called a Messiah. Now Cyrus, who was an heathen king, is called a Messiah: (see page 5) how much more Agrippa, who was of the stock of Abraham, and king over Israel.

Thus far I have shewn here that the whole defence of the people that say that the Messiah is come already, is no defence, because it proves nothing, and therefore the coming of the Messiah until this day is unknown, and this mystery is only known to God, and was never told to any of the prophets. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come. Isaiah lxiii. 4. Learn now from this passage, that the coming of the Messiah was never revealed to mankind. Again; And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth for ever, that it shall be for a time, times, and a half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished. And I heard, but I understood not: then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things? And he said, Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end. Dan. xii. 7—9. Here it may be observed, that Daniel was longing to know the coming of the Messiah, but could not obtain it.

THE MESSIAH IS NOT YET COME.—We must look upon this world as divided into three periods. The first was during the residence of Adam and Eve in Paradise, and before they fell. The second period began, when Adam was driven out from Paradise, and continued until the coming of the Messiah. The third or last period will commence by the coming of the Messiah.

The first part was perfect. The middle part was imperfect. The third part will restore the first perfection, and so continue for evermore.

In the first, man was perfect, that is, without sin ; then he was an angel ; for angels in heaven sin not, and where there is no sin, there is no death : by this we may learn that man was born to live for ever, because a perfect God created a perfect man ; and as God lives for ever, such was to be the nature of man, and so it was, because the proper habitation of man was Paradise, and there he was to live for ever, he and his seed after him. We also know from Scripture that Paradise is upon earth, for we read in Genesis, chap. ii. 10, And a river went out of Eden, to water the garden ; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads : and the names of these rivers are well known to the world. Now when heaven and earth, and all the hosts of them were finished, then man and angels were both alike ; heaven and earth were both alike, for the one was as holy as the other ; nay, the degree of man was above the angels, for his wisdom was above theirs ; the angels could give no names to all living creatures, but Adam did, and until this day they bear the names which Adam gave them : Now one of the angels became jealous of the glory of man ; this was Satan, who was at that time a very great angel in heaven ; he rebelled against his Lord, descended upon earth, disguised himself in the figure of a serpent, succeeded according to his wishes, and occasioned the fall of man : here Adam lost all his former glory, and became miserable and fearful : he dreaded the appearance of his Maker, but at length was condemned to die, and driven out of Paradise. Now at the time when Adam sinned, all the generations were yet in his loins, and are therefore born in sin ; and we know that sin is death : as all men are born in sin, they must all consequently die.

Thus man became a fallen creature, and will continue so for six thousand years, according to the days of the creation of the world, but no longer. This is the second period, or properly the middle world, and its proper title, the wicked and ungodly world.

From all that is here advanced may clearly be seen that the Messiah is not yet come; for the world must exist in a corrupt state six thousand years, and the question is, of what use would his coming be? But when this number shall be at an end, or nearly at an end, then will be the time of his coming; and then will commence the third period, or properly the NEW WORLD, which will be called the world of the Messiah.

THE NEW WORLD—will commence by the first appearance of the Messiah; the world will be restored to its former glory, a new heaven and a new earth will appear, the former will pass away, mankind will recover their primitive glory, and will be above the angels; Satan and his band will be destroyed. The seventh day of the creation was the Sabbath, and that day only received a blessing, and was set apart for ever to be observed as a holy day; which was a type of the great Sabbath, i. e. the world of the Messiah, which also will be called the blessed world.

THE MESSIAH IS NOT YET COME.—We are assured by the prophet Isaiah, lix. 20, 21, that as long as Israel is dispersed abroad, the Messiah is not come; for by his coming the sin of Israel will be blotted out: and this prophetic declaration is confirmed by the apostle Paul; And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins. Romans xi. 26, 27. First, must be considered the term, For this is my covenant. What is that covenant? to send them the deliverer. For what? to take away their sins. Here it must be acknowledged by everyone, that when the Messiah shall come, the sin of Israel will be taken away; and here is a clear proof that as long as Israel is scattered, their sin is not taken away, and their continuance in their sins affords an evidence that the Messiah is not yet come.

THAT THE MESSIAH IS NOT YET COME,—may be confirmed by scripture: And I will make your cities waste, and bring your temples unto desolation. And I will scatter you among the heathen; and the land of your enemies shall eat you up. And they that are left of you shall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them. And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the Lord their God. But I will for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt in the sight of the heathen, that I might be their God; I am the Lord. Levit. xxvi. 31. 33. 38, 39. 44, 45. Here you may learn, that before the coming of the Messiah the first and second temple must be destroyed, the land of Israel laid waste, Israel scattered among all nations, and there to pine away in the sins of their fathers, and their own, and afterwards the first covenant will be remembered, and Israel will be restored; but as Christ came before these times he could not be the Messiah.

THE MESSIAH IS NOT COME.—Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of EDOM, that dwellest in the land of Uz: the cup also shall pass through unto thee; thou shalt be drunken, and shalt make thyself naked. The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished, O daughter of ZION; he will no more carry thee away into captivity, O daughter of EDOM, he will discover thy sins. Lament. iv. 21, 22. It is well known that the prophet Jeremiah lived at the time of the destruction of the first temple: the question here will be, how came the prophet to take notice of Edom?

To which it may be answered, that it frequently happened whilst a prophet was delivering the oracles of God, a new subject would on a sudden be revealed to his mind : so here the prophet lamented over Jerusalem and her people ; on a sudden was shewn to him a great lamentation ; that is, the burning of the second temple by Edom, and the present long captivity ; but at the same time was also shewn to him the downfall of Edom, and the redemption of Israel ; and when he had finished this short prophecy, he began again with his former subject, that is, with the fifth chapter of the Lamentations.

This short prophecy must be well considered. First ; the prophet tells Edom to rejoice and be glad of the downfall of Israel, but know, says he, that a day is appointed for you also ; and that day will be when the sin of Israel shall be accomplished, and that will be the day when thy sin shall be discovered, and from thence Israel shall no more be carried away into captivity. Here is a plain proof that the rise of Israel depends on the downfall of Edom. Secondly ; as long as Edom is master, Israel must remain a prisoner. Thirdly ; so long as Israel is a prisoner ; his sins are not accomplished, and as long as they are not accomplished, the measure of Edom is not full ; for these two points must come to pass at once, that the one shall finish his sin, and the other shall only commence to pay his debts. Now if any honest man will consider this argument, he must acknowledge that the Messiah is not yet come : But if any person will still contend, that the Messiah is come, then let him answer this question. The prophet says, The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished, O daughter of Zion ; he will no more carry thee away into captivity. Consider well the text, that when the sin of Israel shall be finished, he will no more be in captivity. This prophecy was declared more than five hundred years before Christ. Now tell me, of what use was his coming ? He could do no good to Israel ; and what can be a clearer proof than the present captivity, that the period for the coming of the Messiah was not at that time? Secondly ; the whole world is witness, that Edom is not yet fallen : but what is the proof that Edom is not yet fallen ? The proof is, the captivity of Israel ; for the moment Edom shall fall, the captivity of Israel shall be ended, and Israel shall be restored ; and that is the proper time for the coming of the Messiah, but not before. Thus far it is proved, that the Messiah is not come.

PROOF FROM THE GOSPEL THAT CHRIST WAS NOT THE MESSIAH.—And Christ went out, and departed from the temple : and his disciples came to him, to shew him the buildings of the temple. And Christ said unto them, See ye all these things ? verily I say unto you, there shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down. Matt. xxiv. 1, 2. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations : and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. Luke xxi. 24. Here Christ gave instruction to his disciples, by telling them, that Jerusalem must be destroyed, and Israel must fall by the sword, and be led captive among all nations. Now here he testifies that he was not the Messiah ; for by the coming of the Messiah Israel will be restored, but not to go into a fresh captivity. Further he says, that Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, and that the people shall be in captivity, until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled ; this is true, that Israel shall be dispersed until the measure of the iniquities of the Gentiles shall be full ; at that time Israel shall be accomplished and the punishment of the Gentiles shall commence.

We find that God said the same to Abraham ; Thy seed shall be in captivity until the fourth generation, then they shall be restored : for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full. Genesis xv. 16. This declaration is confirmed by the apostle Paul: Tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile. Romans ii. 9. Here we learn, that when Jew and Gentile both are found guilty, the Jew is the first to be punished, and when the Jew has suffered out his time, the Gentile comes next. But glory, honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile. v. 10. From these passages we may learn, that both in punishment and reward, the Jew is the first, and after comes the Gentile. You see here plainly that Paul meant nothing else but this; that when Israel should have finished their sufferings, at that time the measure of the Gentiles would be just full. But in regard of reward it will be the contrary, for Israel will be the first. Saying, hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads. And I heard the number of them which were sealed; and there were sealed one hundred and forty and four thousand, that is, of each tribe of Israel twelve thousand. After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, &c. Rev. vii. 3, 4. 9.

I should wish that the reader would take notice of all nations, and he will be much surprised to find, that out of all nations not one of the Gentile world shall be worthy to be called the servant of God, but he who is to be called, is only a Jew. And we find the same in the Old Testament; that Israel were always the sufferers, before any other nations, but after, they followed them. And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them: Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Ye shall certainly drink. For lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? ye shall not be unpunished. Jer. xxv. 28, 29. But in the great day of Israel we find that those Egyptians who were their lords and masters, were very glad even to follow them, and that not a few, but in great numbers. Exod. xii. 38. Now when the second great day of Israel shall once come, it will be so again, even among all nations, that they who were lords, nay kings and princes, will be glad to lay hold of the skirt of a Jew. Zech. viii. 23. From this last proof, I wish to know, where is the boasting of the Gentiles, since Christ was not the Messiah?

BY THE WITNESS OF THE GOSPEL THAT CHRIST WAS NOT THE MESSIAH.—And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? Matt. xxiv. 3. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. v. 34. Here he appointed a fixed time for his second coming, and that fixed time could not be very long. I will allow for that generation an hundred years, now this year is 1811, and yet he is not come. If he was the Messiah, then his fixed time must have been accomplished; but as he did not come, it is a clear proof that he was no Messiah.

THE MESSIAH IS NOT YET COME.—When the Messiah shall come, all the sons of Adam will be of one language, and all of them shall worship the true God; but we see, both before and after the coming of Christ, no change took place among the nations; the different languages, the different worships, continue even unto this day; so that his coming was of no use, and therefore he could not be the Messiah.

Perhaps some people will say that his coming was of great benefit to numbers of nations, because he taught them the true worship. This a poor defence, and without foundation; for we find that six hundred years after Christ a man arose by the name of Mohammed, and established a new religion, and has now many more followers than Christ. At this very day, if I ask a Turk which is the only true religion, he will say, that of Mohammed ; if I ask the same question of a Christian, he will say, that there is no religion upon the face of the world that can be called true, except that of Christ ; but if I should ask a Christian concerning Mohammed, his answer will be that Mohammed was an impostor. If a Turk should say to a Christian, what is the principal foundation of your religion ? he would say, I believe in a Trinity, that is, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Here the Turk will contradict him, saying, It is not true ; for I as a Turk believe no such thing ; for there is no more than one true God. Do you observe here, that the one will contradict the other : now where will they both run for assistance ? even to Moses, and both of them will confess that the law of Moses is the law of God : and here the Jew will laugh at them both, because no law suit can stand without two witnesses at least ; and here the Turk cannot produce even one witness ; for neither the Jew nor the Christian will be his witness, neither will the Jew or the Turk bear witness to the Christian ; but both of them will bear witness that the law of Moses is the law of God, and here the Jew has two witnesses ; his law suit must gain the cause.

Now, if the law of Israel is the law of God, then both the former will come to nothing.

Christ thought to build for himself a castle in this world ; but he could not find a piece of ground : what did he then ? he observed the castle of Moses extending on every side ; he thought to himself ; Although there is no room for me, yet will I build a castle : so he crept up on the top of Moses' castle, and there in one corner he erected one for himself. Afterwards Mohammed passed by, and observing one castle built on the top of the other, began to laugh, and said, I observe the other corner will suit me, and here I also will build my castle ; he was as good as his word, and built himself a castle at the other corner. Each of them dwelt in his own castle ; good fortune attended them, both of them prospered ; yet still, day and night, both of them were afraid, and their whole lives were spent in fear ; for they thought, that if Moses should one day come to visit his castle, he would be surprised to find two castles built on the top of his, and in a great rage he would command one of his tempests, saying, Go ye, and pluck them both off, and carry them away, and let me see no more of them. This will be the end of both castles ; but the castle of Moses will stand for ever.

THE MESSIAH IS NOT YET COME.—It was ordained that there should be four empires : three have passed away already ; the fourth, or last, is the Roman empire, and by the coming of the Messiah, this last will come to nothing ; but we find that by the coming of Christ, the Roman Empire was not destroyed, and now one thousand eight hundred and eleven years since Christ, and the Roman Empire is still in power ; this must prove that he was not the Messiah : but is the MESSIAH TO COME TWICE ?—Some people will say, yes ; that he is come once, and will come a second time ; but this must be proved before it can be believed ; but where is the proof ? The proof must be brought from the Old Testament, and what will they find there ? by which of the prophets will they find that the Messiah is to come twice ? They can produce none ; but still they have found something, and upon that, every thing is built. Daniel is the prophet on whom they lay hold ; this we will try, this we will examine, and then we shall see how the matter will end ; the following is the passage they quote from this prophet : Thou, O king, sawest, and, behold a great image ; this great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee, and the form thereof was terrible ; this image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass ; his legs of iron ; his feet, part of iron and part of clay. Dan. ii. 31, 32, 33. It pleased God to shew to Nebuchadnezzar in a dream what should come to pass until the coming of the Messiah, and that there should be four empires until that time. The first of these four was the head of fine gold ; this was Nebuchadnezzar, or Babylon. The second was the breast and arms of silver ; this was to be Persia and Media. The third was Greece, or his belly and thighs of brass ; this was Alexander the Great. The fourth was the iron legs ; which represented the Romans. This last was to be divided in process of time, that is, his feet, part of iron and part of clay.—Five ages must be considered here, and in one of them the Messiah is to come. Every one will acknowledge that the time for the coming of the Messiah was neither during the time of the first, the time of the second, nor the time of the third ; it must remain, that the coming of the Messiah was, or is to be, during the time of the fourth, or the last empire. And here we must notice that the fourth is represented, first in great power, afterwards to be divided. The question will be, was the Messiah to come when the Romans were in great power, or after they were divided ? I say, that his time could not be whilst the Romans were in full power, nor until that great power was divided. It is well known that to each of these four empires was ordained a number of years, at the end of which, the second appeared and took its place ; it would be a vain thing to say that Cyrus came and took the empire of Nebuchadnezzar, because Babylon was to have the dominion for seventy years, and when Cyrus succeeded Nebuchadnezzar, or Babylon, just at that time ended the seventy years. In the same manner every one of the four had a fixed number of years, and at the moment one had finished his number of years, immediately the other came forward and succeeded it. The question will therefore be, of what use was the coming of Christ in the time of Augustus, or in the time of Tiberius? It is well known that Rome was then in the zenith of her power. The Messiah when he comes will have the whole power to himself, and in the same manner as the former empires had it; and how could it be that the Messiah, who was to subdue, was taken and subdued by the Romans, and even lost his life?

Secondly; it is impossible to say that the Messiah came in the time of the Romans, as at that time it was the stated period of Rome, and the Messiah could not come before the end of the fourth or Roman empire.

Thirdly; let us further examine the text and see: His legs of iron; his feet, part of iron and part of clay. v. 33. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. v. 34. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. v. 35.

The person who has eyes and understanding, can see that the time of the Messiah was not until the fourth empire became divided. And further observe, that he is to make his appearance at that time when the image shall have his power in the foot; and when he smote the image, he did not smite the head, because Babylon passed away a long time before; neither did he smite the silver, because that was no more; neither did he smite the belly, which was Greece, because that was no more; nor did he smite the iron legs, or the Romans, for how could he smite any of them when they were no more? he could smite none, except that part which was then existing; and here we find, that when the Messiah comes, he will find that all the four empires are swallowed up by the feet, and there lies the whole power; and that power he will smite and bring them to nothing, and he will smite them only once, for so says the prophet Daniel: and here is a plain proof that the Messiah by his appearance at the first time will finish every thing, and who is he that will contradict the prophet to say, that he will come twice? And by all these statements here advanced, it is clearly proved that the Messiah is not come yet.

But here we may ask a question, Is the son of David to be the Messiah of the Gentiles or of the Jews?—I say, of the Jews only; and

NO MESSIAH FOR THE GENTILES.—Thus we prove it. Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold thy king cometh, but not the king of the Gentiles. Unto thee, but not to another. Zech. ix. 9.

By this passage we may learn, that when the Messiah shall come, the daughters of Jerusalem will rejoice greatly, because he will restore them, and then the people will shout for joy; but by the coming of Christ, Israel was not restored, but scattered; they had no joy, but lamentations: here you see that he was not the Messiah, and if he was not, then the Gentiles have none.

Secondly; Israel shall have occasion to rejoice with his mother Jerusalem; because the mother will receive her children again, and be built up again: but what joy can there be for the Gentiles, the destroyer of Jerusalem and her children? Again; Let Israel rejoice in him that made him; let the children of Zion be joyful in their king. Psalm cxlix. 2. Again; But they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, observe, THEIR KING. Jer. xxx. 9.

Again ; The breaker is come up before them, they have broken up, and have passed through the gate, and are gone out by it : and their king shall pass before them, and the Lord on the head of them. Micah ii. 13.

Thus far I have proved that there is no Messiah for the Gentiles, and no joy have they to expect by his coming, but the contrary ; For behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehosaphat, and will plead with them there for my people, and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations and parted my land. Assemble yourselves and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about thither, cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord ; for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about ; but in that day the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. Joel iii. 1, 2. 11. 12. 16.

NO MESSIAH FOR THE GENTILES,—By the proof of their Gospel. And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, art not the least among the princes of Judah, for out of thee shall come a governor that shall rule my people Israel, but not the Gentiles. Matt. ii. 6. And again ; But he answered and said, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Matt. xix. 24. Again ; When the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. xix. 28. Again ; That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Luke xxii. 30.

Here I observe—First ; that the Messiah shall be called the king of Israel.

Secondly ; that when he comes, he will be sent only to Israel, but not to the Gentiles.

Thirdly ; that Christ forgot the whole world, and glories in nothing but judging Israel; and if he is to be Messiah to the Gentiles also, why did he not say, And ye shall sit upon twelve thrones judging all nations, or at least judging the twelve tribes of Israel, also the Gentiles? neither do we see that his apostles asked him any questions, saying, And what will be the condition of the Gentiles? you see here, neither Christ nor the apostles took any notice of the Gentiles, as if only Israel was the whole world; and therefore it is plain, that there is NO MESSIAH FOR THE GENTILES. Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God. Philip, ii. 6. From this passage we may learn, that he was no Messiah, much less a God.

Hitherto we have proved, that the Messiah is not yet come, and that there is no Messiah for the Gentiles, and that Christ was not the promised Messiah: and I will bring only one proof more that CHRIST WAS NOT THE MESSIAH.—For I have not spoken of myself, but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say, and what I should speak. John xii. 49. I ask, first, What was his commission? I am sent only to the house of Israel. Mat. xv. 24. this was his commission. Secondly; Why did they not believe him, if he was sent as the Messiah? Whose word will stand, the word of God, or the word of man?

We find, when Moses was sent to Israel, they believed him; but now, how is it that God sent the Messiah to his people, and they would not receive him? By this it appears that the word of man will be established before the word of God. God said Yes, but I Israel said No.

GOD KNOWS THE FUTURE.—He foreknew, therefore, that Israel would not receive Christ—to what purpose was he then sent? did God intend to impose on his first born son Israel, and lay before him a great stumbling block that he might fall? Let us see how this matter ended; first, the word of God came to nothing ; secondly, the Messiah was despised and rejected ; and, thirdly, lost his life.

We also learn, from the words of the apostle Paul ; For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. Romans xi, 32. But hear the words of Christ ; he says, I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. What is here to be done, if the words of Paul are true, then the question will remain, why was Christ then sent to Israel ? It appears plain from the words of Paul, that had Israel received him, he never would have been the Messiah of the Gentiles ; but in favour of the Gentiles Israel was made blind on purpose to save the Gentiles, and afterwards Israel was to be made guilty and was punished, because they despised the word of God, and slew the Messiah.

Can it be believed, that a true God would do wrong, and impose on his creatures, purposely that they should fall ? Will not every man of understanding say, that God is true, and all his actions perfect ? If this be acknowledged, then Christ could never have been sent by God ; and so it will be proved, that God is a true and a just God ; for his delight is to save his creatures, but not to destroy them without cause ; and even those who do offend him wilfully, yet their punishment is executed in mercy ; for that is his name, to pity the work of his hand ; and if Christ had been sent by him, certainly he would have been received by Israel ; but as he was not sent by God, then the word of God was not prophaned by Israel, and he received due punishment, for by the law he was guilty ; and this is a proof that he was not the Messiah ; for as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater ; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth ; it shall not return unto me void, but it shalt ac-comply that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. Isaiah lv. 10, 11.

These passages will teach us, that at the time when God shall send the true Messiah, he will prosper, and Israel will receive him, and that he will accomplish every thing : but see here what is further said ; For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace ; the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. v, 12. Here you may observe, that when he is sent, he will be the leader of Israel, and will restore them to their own land with great joy. Nothing can be more true than the following passage ; Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God. Philippians ii. 6. On this account he could not prosper ; because he wished to set up for himself, and to be equal with God : but when the Royal Messiah shall come, he will not say, that he is a god ; but he will say, The Lord God of our forefathers has sent me to bring you home ; I am the son of David, and the servant of our God, who has anointed me to be your Messiah. Only one thing more we have to examine, which is,—WAS THE MESSIAH OF THE GENTILES A PROPHET OR NOT ? I think not. I do not speak of myself, but every thing I advance is proved by the Holy Scripture. We see not our signs, there is no more any prophet, nor is there among us any that knoweth how long it will be so. Ps. lxxiv. 9. By the whole of this Psalm, it is to be observed that the prophet complaineth of the desolation of the sanctuary, and of the miserable state of Israel in this long captivity. In former times our forefathers had seen signs and wonders ; they had also among them prophets ; but since our sanctuary is destroyed, we have no more a prophet. Every one may learn that this Psalm speaks concerning the present dispersion of Israel, and that until the restoration they shall have no prophet. This will shew that Jesus was no prophet.

DANIEL.—In the book of this prophet we have it thus ; The commandment came forth to seal up visions, and prophecy. ch. ix. 24 ; but mark here, in the text it is not said prophecy, but the proper meaning is a prophet, that is, there shall be no more a prophet ; and accordingly we find that MALACHI was the last of all the prophets, and that until the restoration of Israel there shall be no other prophet. One thing more you ought to know, which is, that the coming of the Messiah, or the restoration of Israel, is all the same ; both mean one thing, for the Messiah is Israel, and Israel is the Messiah.

The next prophet who will appear in this world will be the Messiah, and from thence prophecy will cease no more ; and so we are told by the word of God. And it shall come to pass afterwards, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh ; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions : and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my spirit. And I will shew wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. Joel ii. 28, 29, 30. Learn here, that whatever is declared by the mouth of the prophet will come to pass by the restoration, but not before. Thus far it is proved, that Jesus was no God, no Messiah, and no prophet.

THE GENTILE'S QUESTION.—Only one question is left for me to ask, which is, how a Jew will account for the miracles which Jesus wrought ?

THE ANSWER OF THE JEWS.—Miracles are a poor and miserable defence in behalf of the coming of the Messiah. Miracles are no sign of his coming ; for bad and wicked men also can do miracles, and shew wonders. First, we find that those miracles, which Moses performed in the sight of Pharaoh and his people, were done by the power of God ; yet we find that the wise men of Pharaoh performed also the same miracles that Moses did, and we have the testimony of scripture that these wise men are called sorcerers, magicians, and that their doings were by enchantment.

To drive devils out of possessed men, is no miracle at all; for we find a common man could do it. See Josephus, book 8, page 118. Nay, they have even the power to prophesy; for the damsel possessed with a spirit of divination was able to prophesy. Acts xvi. 16. By the art of enchantment, and by witchcraft, men may do great wonders. In the second epistle to Timothy iii. 8, we read of two men in the time of Moses by the name of Jannes and Jambres; according to tradition, these two men were the heads of all the wise men of Pharaoh; and when the Egyptians were drowned in the Red Sea, these two men flew out of the sea like winged fowls, but they were soon brought down. Symbols, they also prophesied, but all by the works of the devil; and if we look into ancient and modern historians, it will be found that numbers have performed wonders, and all by enchantment; but none of them can say, I command that a fire shall come down from heaven; none of them can say, I command the sun to stand still.

Observe what is said: And the Pharisees came forth and began to question with him, seeking of him a sign from heaven. And he sighed deeply in his spirit, and said, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation. And he left them, and entering into the ship again, departed to the other side. Mark viii. 11, 12, 13. Here we may observe, if Jesus was the true Messiah, it was his duty to have complied with all their requests; for, if not, why should they believe him? but what shall we say here? he who could shew no sign from heaven, himself teaches the world, that they should give no credit, if any person should come and say, I am the Messiah, and here I will shew you signs and wonders; he says, Believe him not, For there shall arise false christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect: believe it not. Matt. xxiv. 24. 26. You see here, that bad and wicked men may shew great signs and wonders, and yet does Jesus himself say, Believe not. Now the question will be, why should any one believe his miracles, and not believe another? what is the proof that he should be believed? there is none. Hence you may learn, that miracles are no evidence of the coming of the Messiah. Now if miracles are no proof, then he was not the Messiah, and was no more than another person. Further, I shall come to shew you, that even a prophet cannot be established by miracles.

Moses, the Lord of all the prophets, although he has shewn signs and wonders in the sight of nations, yet was not established as a prophet sent by God, until the giving of the law. But did Moses perform miracles, that Israel should believe him to be the prophet of God? no; for we read thus: And I will stretch out my hand, and smite Egypt with all my wonders, which I will do in the midst thereof: and after that he will let you go. Exod. iii. 20. And Moses answered and said, But, behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice: for they will say, The Lord hath not appeared unto thee. ch. iv. 1. You see here, God said to Moses, that he should do wonders, and they would believe him; but Moses knew that miracles were not sufficient to convince them that he was sent by God, therefore he said, Behold they will not believe me. Then God said, It is true what thou sayest; but I will give you a particular mark, whereby Israel will believe that I have sent you; And he said, Certainly I will be with thee; and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee; When thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain, ch. iii. 12. Here we are instructed, that miracles did not establish Moses as a prophet, until the giving of the law. Now in the case of Moses, he could not bring forth Israel out of Egypt without miracles; for see here the answer of Pharaoh: And Pharaoh said, Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go. ch. v, 2. In this case Moses was forced to shew some miracles, to convince Pharaoh that there was a Lord above him; and yet, after nine miracles were performed, the heart of Pharaoh still remained hard, until the last of the ten, then he let Israel depart. Although Pharaoh and his people were plagued ten times, yet again he assumed courage, took his army and followed them unto the red sea; in this case again no alternative was left for Israel, but either to return to Egypt, or to cast themselves into the sea. What could Moses do here? nothing else but by a miracle to shew to Pharaoh that there was a Lord above him: the sea was divided, the one party walked over on dry foot, but the other party perished. In the same manner all the miracles which were done in the desert were necessary things, but not to establish himself as a prophet: for although Israel had seen signs and wonders, yet still did not all Israel believe that he was sent by God; for, whenever they wished or longed for any thing, and Moses did not fulfil their desires immediately, they murmured. Thus they went on only for fifty days, and then the whole nation was brought forth out of the camp to meet with God, and they stood at the nether part of the mount; here all the men of Israel, their wives, their sons, and their daughters all stood. Exod. xix. 17.

Now, to make them all fit to hear the voice of the great God of Israel, the Holy Spirit was poured out upon each that stood there, and thus became a whole nation, in one moment, prophets; for who is able to hear the voice of God, if he is not holy? we find that afterward, when any one of the prophets was inspired, at that very time he lost the use of all his limbs; he lay like dead, and when he recovered, he knew his commission. With all the prophets God spoke, either in a dream or in a vision, except that with Moses he spoke mouth to mouth.

Now learn from the children of the fathers; all the prophets were the children of that generation which came forth out of Egypt; but here, to the fathers and mothers, he spoke face to face; for so it is written in the text: The Lord talked with you face to face in the mount out of the midst of the fire. Deut. v. 4. Every one must acknowledge, that at that time each of the nation was a prophet; and here the Lord gave his law to a nation of prophets. This was the day for Moses to be established as a prophet of God; every man of Israel, every woman of Israel, knew now that Moses was the man whom God had chosen; and the whole nation cried out, and said, Behold the Lord our God hath shewed us his glory and his greatness, and we have heard his voice out of the midst of the fire: we have seen this day, that God doth talk with man, and he liveth. Deut. v. 24. Observe the term; We have seen this day that God doth talk with man and he liveth. Here you may learn, that until now they did not believe that God ever spake to man; but now they believed, and said, For who is there of all flesh, that hath heard the voice of the living God speaking out of the midst of the fire, and lived? v. 26. This was the time when all Israel believed, that the miracles which Moses had wrought in Egypt, by the red sea, in the wilderness, were all performed by the power of God; thenceforward they believed whatever he told them. On this account the people said unto him, Go thou near, and hear all that the Lord our God shall say: and speak thou unto us all that the Lord our God shall speak unto thee; and we will hear it and do it, v. 27.

Thus far I have proved, that a prophet cannot be established by miracles ; for miracles can be performed even by bad and wicked men.

The authority and POWER of the LAW of Moses established for ever, as well in heaven, as also upon earth ; and there never will be any other law except this. In the book of Deuteronomy, chap. xxviii, is pronounced the blessing for obedience, and the curses for disobedience. In chap. xxx we read thus, And it shall come to pass, when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, &c. v. 1—10. Moses, the great prophet, foretold Israel what would befall them, For I know that after my death ye will utterly corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you ; and evil will befall you in the latter days ; because ye will do evil in the sight of the Lord, &c. ch. xxxi. 29. In chap. xxviii. xxix. he tells the people that they will be scattered among all nations ; that they will have no king, no land, no temple ; and in that condition they will abide for many days. Further, he gave them advice how to proceed, and by what means they might recover their land, their temple, and their king. From the beginning of the first verse until the eleventh, we may learn, First, that there is a promise that in the latter days Israel will return to the Lord their God.—Secondly, he will restore them to their own land again.—Thirdly, The Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live. Fourthly, And the Lord thy God will put all these curses upon thine enemies ; if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which are written in this book of the law. Deut. xxx. 10. Let every one observe these ten verses, and then he will acknowledge that the law of Moses is in full power at this day, just as it was in the time of Moses. Now, if the law of Moses is in full force this day, it will prove that there is no other law, and if there is no other law, then the boasting of all the Gentile world is put away, and it will remain that among Israel only are to be found the oracles of God. The LAW of Moses is perfect. The Gentiles say, It is imperfect; on this account the law is abolished, and a better one established. But we ought never to speak at random to establish any thing; sufficient proof ought to be given, in particular where it concerns the honour and glory of the great Creator of heaven and earth; if the law is imperfect, then you must say also, that God is imperfect; because this law is called the law of God, and who will dare to say that a perfect God established an imperfect law.

This law tells us, that God is perfect; He is the Rock, his work is perfect. Deut. xxxii. 4. As for God, his way is perfect, the word of the Lord is tried. Psalm xviii. 30. The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure. Psalm xix. 7.

What will you say here? I have produced two witnesses; the one, Moses the man of God; the other, king David the man of God; both of them tell you that the law is perfect, and whatever is perfect is finished and complete; now it is your duty to bring forward two witnesses, of equal character, and let them prove that the above witnesses' testimony is false; but the question will be, who are your two witnesses? Can you produce two men able to stand, and to contend with Moses and David? No you cannot. They both say, a perfect God has given a perfect law; but look here, stand in awe: And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables. Exod. xxxii. 16. These two tables contained the whole law; for in the Ten Commandments there are six hundred and thirteen letters, and each letter stands for one command, and in the whole law of Moses there are six hundred and thirteen Commandments; and such was the power of these two tables, that it contained the complete law of Moses. Thus far it is proved, that a perfect God gave a perfect law, and if so, it contains every thing and sufficient to make happy all the sons of Adam.

But here the Gentile world will say, that this statement is not true, because this law was given only to Israel, but not to the Gentiles, and therefore this law cannot make happy all the sons of Adam. To this I answer, That it is true, the law was given only to Israel, and that this law is called, The inheritance of Israel. Moses commanded us a law, even the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob. Deut. xxxiii. 4. Why did God give the law for an inheritance to Israel, and not to any other nation, or not to all nations? forasmuch as all nations are his creatures, he ought to have given the law to all of them. We find, that the sons of Japheth, Ham, and Shem, were in number seventy: they multiplied greatly, And they said one to another, Let us build a city and a tower, and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth. Genesis xi. 14. The whole proceeding of this second world was to rebel against God. The Lord said, their punishment should be that which they were afraid of; they said, Lest we be scattered; and God said, They shall be scattered. Then the Lord said to his heavenly Sanhedrin, or the seventy angels that minister unto him, Let us go down and there confound their language. v. 7. Here lots were cast, and that family which fell in the lot of Gabriel, he became the guardian angel of that family; and in this manner the seventy families were divided among the seventy angels. These seventy families became afterwards seventy nations; so every nation had a prince in heaven, when all these things were finished. Then the Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of the whole earth. v. 8. And every family was directed by his guardian angel to that land which was given to them. Tarshish went and settled in that land; Cush, the son of Ham, went to Ethiopia; Ophir, the son of Shem, went to that part which was afterwards known by his name the land of Ophir, and so did all the rest. At that time Abraham was forty-eight years old; he saw the wickedness of the new little world; he told them, that the Lord certainly would punish them for their rebellion; but they despised his good advice: he cursed them, and said, Destroy, O Lord! and divide their tongues. Psalm lv. 9. At that time Abraham was the only man upon the face of the earth who worshipped the true God. We just mentioned that lot was cast among the heavenly Sanhedrin; the lot which fell to the portion of God was Abraham and his family; as it is written, For the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. Deut. xxxii. 9. The fathers who went down into Egypt were seventy; for so it is written, And all the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy. Exod i. 5. According to this number the gentile world was established; that is, each of these seventy persons represented one nation; and so we are informed by the word of God. When the most high divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. Deut. xxxii. 8.

Here we may learn that the lot of God was in number as much as that of all the seventy angels. The division of tongues was a punishment to the sons of Adam, on account of their rebellion, for which reason they were scattered abroad; only one good family was found among them all, and that family fell to the lot of God. What was here to be done? should God cast away a godly portion, and instead of it take a wicked one? Certainly not, for wickedness is an abomination unto the Lord. God is good, and his delight is in good; he therefore gloried in his godly portion. Now God had a holy law; to whom was it proper to give it, to a wicked family, or to his own family? Every one will say, that no family had a right to his oracles except his own, and this was no more than justice; and therefore he gave the law for an inheritance to Israel. Moses commanded us a law, even the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob. Deut. xxxiii. 4. Here you see, as an act of justice, and lawfully, the oracles of God belonged to no nation except to Israel. It must be acknowledged, that those to whom the oracles of God are committed must alone be the ministers of God.

Question.—We know that God is good and merciful to all his creatures: did God glory only in his own lot? Has he cast away the seventy lots which he gave to the seventy angels? Are they not also his? Is he not the Lord of heaven and earth? Are the oracles of God to make happy only one family, and must all the rest perish?

Answer.—Although the oracles of God are the inheritance of Israel alone, yet the nations are not deprived of its benefit. The one is bound to take care of it, because it was given into their charge; the other has no charge, and is not bound to take care of it; but they may come and unite themselves, and partake the same benefit; nay, they are called and invited by the word of the Lord of it, and here I will give you the very words of the invitation. Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it. Neither let the son of the stranger, that hath joined himself to the Lord, speak, saying, The Lord hath utterly separated me from his people; Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people. Isaiah lvi. 2—7. Here it is proved, that all nations are called to the law, and he who comes to it has a promise beforehand to be happy; but upon condition he observes the sabbath, and the other commandments, for he who will be a sharer of the benefit of the oracles of God must observe what is written in them. Further, you may consider the great charge to Israel concerning strangers that come to join them. First, attend to the command of Moses. He doth execute the judgment of the fatherless and widow, and loveth the stranger, in giving him food and raiment. Love ye therefore the stranger, for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt. Deut. x. 18, 19. Again, they are almost made equal with Israel even in the day of the restoration. So shall ye divide this land unto you according to the tribes of Israel. And it shall come to pass, that ye shall divide it by lot for an inheritance unto you, and to the strangers that sojourn among you, which shall beget children among you: and they shall be unto you as born in the country among the children of Israel; they shall have inheritance with you among the tribes of Israel. And it shall come to pass that in what tribe the stranger sojourneth, there shall ye give him his inheritance, saith the Lord God. Ezek. xlvii. 21—23. Here is the calling of the Gentiles, and they are made equal in promise with Israel, and if they despise this calling, they cannot lay the blame upon any body but themselves: at that day it will be said, no law, no promise.

THE MESSIAH'S KINGDOM IS NOT SPIRITUAL, BUT ABSOLUTELY EARTHLY.—In the last chapter of Ezekiel is described the inheritance of the Messiah. And the residue shall be for the prince. Moreover, from the possession of the Levites, and from the possession of the city, being in the midst of that which is the prince's. Ezek. xlviii. 21, 22. And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all. And David my servant shall be king over them; and they all shall have one shepherd; they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children's children for ever; and my servant David shall be their prince for ever. Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them, and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore. Ezek. xxxvii. 22, 24, 25, 26. And I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd. And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them; I the Lord have spoken it. Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them. And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them. Jer. xxx. 20, 21. And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots: and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord. But with righteousness shall he judge the poor. And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people ; to it shall the Gentiles seek, and his rest shall be glorious. Isa. xi. 1, 2, 3, 4, 10. Behold the days come saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth, but not in heaven. Jer. xxiii. 5. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him : his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the holy nation of the Most high, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him, Dan. vii. 14, 27. Here are sufficient proofs that the kingdom of the Messiah is not a spiritual kingdom ; observe the term, under the whole heaven.

PROOF FROM THE GOSPEL THAT THE KINGDOM OF THE MESSIAH WAS NOT TO BE SPIRITUAL, BUT A KINGDOM OF THIS WORLD.—When the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye shall also sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Matt. xix. 28.—Luke xxii. 30. Must not every body acknowledge that the kingdom of the Messiah is not spiritual, because here is to be set up a throne for the Messiah, and then twelve more for the twelve apostles? this must be in this world, for we know that in heaven there is only one throne. Thus saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool. Isaiah lxvi. 1. Secondly ; here is mentioned eating and drinking, this must be in this world. Thirdly ; in heaven not only Israel is judged but all mankind, but here it is meant, that the Messiah will be king over Israel only.

THE LAW OF AN AMBASSADOR.—Supposing a king has any occasion to send an embassy to a foreign prince, or to a province; he will appoint some great man, chosen out of his subjects. This ambassador will receive from his king a commission, every thing will be laid before him, and he will be directed to speak nothing but what he is ordered and commanded. The ambassador having departed and arrived in that foreign country, is it not his duty to go and discharge faithfully his commission? and when he has done every thing proper, then he has done no more than his duty. But, suppose this ambassador when he arrived in that foreign country, instead of delivering his commission to the government should go into the small towns and villages, and deliver his commission to the poor and ignorant, and at last should ask the ignorant, Will you acknowledge me as an ambassador sent on purpose to you? Jesus did so, and the people said to him, We will not receive thee, for although thou hast proved something, yet we believe thee not; because if thou art a true ambassador, thy duty was not to come to the poor, but to the king and his council, and to deliver unto them thy commission; but as thou hast acted the contrary, it is impossible that thy embassy can be true. Then he said, If ye will not receive me, I will go to another country, and deliver unto them my embassy. Then all the people burst out a laughing, and cried out, Now we can see that thy commission is false, for when thou camest first to us, thou didst declare unto us, that thou hadst received thy commission to no nation but to us, and now thou wilt go to another nation, with the same commission. Considering all these things, Jesus was taken, found guilty, and was punished with a just punishment.

This was the case of the Gentile Messiah.—First, he said, that he was sent to no nation, but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel. What was his duty? To go to king Herod, and before the Sanhedrin, and deliver unto them his commission, and tell them plainly that he was their Messiah, and was sent unto them; but he never went to Jerusalem, and why? because he had heard that John was cast into prison—on this account he departed into Galilee. Did he not testify that he was sent by God to Israel? For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say, and what I should speak. John xii. 49. Did he fulfil his commission? no: for, instead of his going to Jerusalem, the proper place, he went to Galilee. But why was he afraid to go to Jerusalem; it was because John was in prison; and he was afraid, that perhaps they would do the same to him; it is certainly marvellous that the Messiah, who was sent by God, should be afraid to deliver his commission. We will follow him into Galilee, and see what he did there. From that time Jesus began to preach, and went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and disease among the people, Matthew iv. 17. 23. He said unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also; for therefore came I forth. And he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee and cast out devils. Mark i. 38, 39. He said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent. And he preached in the synagogues of Galilee. Luke iv. 43, 44. Let us see what effect his preaching, or his miracles had. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand, with five barley loaves and two small fishes; of this small dinner they all ate plenty, and yet afterwards the fragments that were left were twelve baskets over and above. The next day the people followed him to Capernaum; and when they had found him on the other side, they said unto him, Rabbi, when camest thou hither? he answered them and said, Verily I say unto you, ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves and were filled. Then they said unto him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God? Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent. They said therefore unto him, What sign shewest thou then, that we may see, and believe thee? what dost thou work? Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat. John vi. 10. 13. 25, 26, 28. 29, 30, 31.

If we consider the conduct of this number of people, we must certainly be surprised. They had all eaten yesterday a great dinner; they all saw that there was no more than five barley loaves and two small fishes, and yet more than enough for five thousand people, and that it could not be done except by a miracle; and yet, the very next day, they said to him, Give us a sign from heaven; our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat. Here you may see that all his miracles were considered by them as nothing, except he could shew them a miracle from heaven. On this account they mentioned the manna; but what is more wonderful than all, is this, that he not even once gave them a sign from heaven, although they always were touching that string, and sounding that trumpet. We have already noticed, that his commission was only to Israel; yet one thing we have passed over until now, and that is, to ask the Question, Was his commission only to preach, teach, heal the sick, and shew some miracles?

It appears by his own words, that he was to do nothing but to preach and teach; For therefore I am sent, he says: but I may say freely, THAT IF THIS IS TRUE, then both the angel Gabriel and Zacharias the priest were liars. The angel Gabriel said, And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins. Matt. i. 21. And the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, &c. And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David ; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever ; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Luke i. 26. 32, 33. From the words of the angel, we learn—That the Messiah was only intended for Israel, but not for the Gentiles ; he says, For he shall save his people from their sins : observe the term, his people ; he shall save them from their sins ; but no mention is here made of the Gentiles :—That the Messiah shall be a king, but not a preacher and teacher ; for he says, The Lord shall give unto him the throne of his father David ; and he shall reign over the house of Israel for ever. Thus far is proved by the words of the angel, that the Messiah was not to go round about to preach, but to be a king over Israel, and sit upon a throne.

And Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying, Blessed be the God of Israel ; for he hath visited and redeemed his people , and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David ; as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets : that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us ; to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant ; the oath which he sware to our father Abraham, that he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve him without fear. To give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins ; whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited us. Luke i. 67—74. 77 ; 78. From this prophecy we may learn,—First, that the redemption of Israel will be performed by the Messiah ; mark the term, For he hath visited and redeemed his people ; not a word about the Gentiles.—Secondly, and he hath raised up an horn of salvation for us, but not for the Gentiles, so says the text.—Thirdly, that he is to be a king, or a horn; it means one thing.—Fourthly, that he is to fight against all the enemies of Israel, and to deliver them out of the hand of their enemies.—Fifthly, that he will prosper, that Israel might be saved.—Sixthly, that all the good things are to be done to Israel, because it was a promise of our fathers, also on account of his holy covenant.—Seventhly, besides the covenant and promise, there is an oath, which God swore to Abraham, to do these things to his children at last; and at last, to take away their sins, and from on high he hath visited us; mark visited us.

Thus far it is clearly proved, that the Messiah should not be a preacher, neither should he go round about in the towns, to teach and preach to the people. We must now admit, that if the words of Christ are true, then the words of the angel and Zacharias must be false; and again, if the words of the latter be true, then the words of Christ must be false. That both can be true, is impossible; therefore I thought it best to leave the whole matter to your consideration.

CONCLUSION OF HIS EMBASSY.—After Jesus had walked round about in all parts of Galilee, preaching and teaching, and shewing miracles, hear what his own family say to him. His brethren said unto him, Depart hence, and go into Judea, that thy disciples also may see the works that thou doest. For there is no man that doeth any thing in secret, and he himself seeketh to be known openly. If thou do these things, shew thyself to the world. For neither did his brethren believe in him. John vii. 3—5. The people answered and said, Thou hast a devil. John vii. 20. Therefore I say unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. Matt. xxi. 43. Hence you may learn, that his success was not better abroad than it was at home.

At home he is blamed for doing his work in secret, and abroad he is called a devil. And he cried out, Why go ye about to kill me? and again he says, The kingdom shall be taken, and given to another nation: well might the people cry out, Away with him, he is a bad man; first when he came unto Galilee, he said, that he is sent only to Israel, now with the same commission he will go to another nation; he was taken and judged, and was found guilty, and he received due punishment.

THE MESSIAH WAS TO BE CONQUEROR.—He will subdue all nations by his coming; and he who will be called the Messiah, and whoever is the true Messiah, will be able to perform and finish every thing; nay, without fighting he will never settle his kingdom; and this we shall here prove.—Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Psalm ii. 8.

1. To obtain this large inheritance and possession, cannot be done except by fighting, as it is written, Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Psalm ii. 9.

2. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Daniel ii. 34.

3. Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion; for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs of brass, and thou shalt beat in pieces many nations; and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth. Micah iv. 13.

4. That we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us. Luke i. 71.

5. The Lord of Hosts shall defend them; and they shall devour and subdue with sling stones; and they shall drink and make a noise as through wine; and they shall be filled like bowls, and as the corners of the altar. Zech. ix. 15.

6. In that day will I make the governors of Judah like an hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the nations round about, on the right hand and on the left: and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem. Zech. xii. 6.

Although the king, Messiah, with his people Israel, shall fight all nations, yet the victory will not be theirs, but the Lord's, for so it is written.

1. Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against the nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. Zech. xii. 3. The Lord is a man of war. Exodus xv. 3.

2. The Lord shall go forth as a mighty man; he shall stir up jealousy like a man of war; he shall cry, yea, roar, he shall prevail against his enemies. Isaiah xlii. 13.

Perhaps the Gentiles will say, we never shall go and fight against the Messiah; this is not true, for when he shall come, they shall not believe him to be the Messiah, although they will see wonders in heaven and on earth, yet shall they not believe him: and so it is written, The kings of the earth shall set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord and against his anointed. Psalm ii. 2.

The Gentiles are challenged to a battle. 3. Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up. Joel iii. 9.

The challenge is accepted. Now also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look, &c. Micah iv. 11. And all the nations shall be gathered together against Jerusalem. Zech. xii. 3.

Jerusalem shall be taken by the Gentiles. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Zech. xiv. 2. This will be the last battle in this world; and after this battle shall the kingdom of the Messiah be established, from one end of the world to the other end.

Thus far it is clearly proved, that the kingdom of the Messiah cannot be established, until he first fight against the Gentiles. This will be his commission to appear like a mighty king, and subdue all, but he will not be a preacher.

A particular observation concerning the law of Moses. Every man knows that whatever has a beginning has also an end. We know that man was formed of dust, and unto it he must return; the nature of man is changeable in all his actions; to-day he is bad, to-morrow he is good; to-day he is good, and to-morrow he is bad; to-day he says Yes, and to-morrow he says No; to-day he says No, and to-morrow he says Yes; to-day he says, I will, but to-morrow, I will not; what he had spoken yesterday, to-day he has already forgotten; what he shall speak to-morrow, he knows not; nay, the very minute before, he knows not what he shall speak. But we know this, that there is only one that has no beginning and no end, and this is God: no man will contradict me when I say, that every word that God intended to speak to man, was known to him from everlasting; he, by his Godly wisdom, prepared to himself a drawing by which he was to build this world; in this drawing were specified, the length and breadth of it; and there was an appointed time for every thing, when to begin and when to end; every nation, that was to appear afterwards, was called by its name; and a great number of particular men were called by their name beforehand, yea, every man that was to be born was known unto him: in this drawing were also described, particular rivers and their names, particular mountains and their names, deserts and their names, cities and their names: in this drawing is also to be found how long this world shall exist; also the good and bad fortune of every nation: this drawing is commonly known by the name of the law of Moses. He, by his Godly wisdom, prepared also sub-drawings; but all of them are only the channels of the former: these sub-drawings are commonly known by the name of the prophets. In due time, when he thought proper by his Godly wisdom to create this world, every thing appeared according as it was described in this great drawing.

Abridgment of the Law and the Prophets.—We find in this drawing that in six days the world was created. We ask, why just six days, neither more nor less? We also believe that he who created this world in six days, could have done it in one day, in one hour, nay, in one minute: here we must acknowledge, that it was intended to represent something. One reason is this, to shew that the number of six is a complete number, which is to denote the four quarters of this world, heaven above, and the earth beneath; these six points include the whole description of the drawing, and the Lord over the whole of this great fabric is only one. This point will be handled more in the following pages. Secondly, That each day is to represent a thousand years, that is, that this world shall exist for the space of six thousand years; the seventh day, which is called the sabbath, represented, that after six thousand years, there shall be a sabbatical time for a thousand years.

The Creation of man was the last; his name was called Adam: in the original this name consists only of three letters, viz. אדם ADM. In this name is represented the beginning of the world, also the centre, and the end. The letter A denotes Adam, the letter D is David, the M is the Messiah.

In the year of the creation, 2854, David was born; and so long as it is from Adam to David, even so long, or near it, will be the time of the coming of the Messiah; but never before. By this account it appears, that the time of the appearance of the Messiah is near at hand; for if we add 2854, then the coming of the Messiah will be in the year of the creation 5708. This present year we count 5571, and here we find that there are yet 137 years to the time of his coming; but we know that this time will be shortened; and, according to the opinion of one great and eminent Rabbi, there are only 29 years more to the time of his coming, and when we shall begin to count 5600 all things in this world will be settled.

Thus far goes our observation on this grand point, that Adam was in the beginning, and David in the middle, and the Messiah near the end.

Further it ought to be observed, that it cannot be said to shorten the beginning, neither can the centre be shortened, but the end of any thing may be shortened.

We also know that Christ was born 910 years after David. This short number will not balance the length of 6000 years, here we shall draw a line of 6000 cubits— $a\text{---}d\text{---}m$. From the letter A to the letter D, is the half or the middle, and from D to M must be the same distance. A and D cannot be shortened, but the M, as it is the end, may be shortened; but if we consider the coming of Christ, the letter M will be a long way from the end. And here again, we will bring the length of this word $a\text{---}d\text{---}m$, thus far can only be brought the distance between David and Christ, and 910 years are no more than a third part of 2854; and if we only consider well, it must be an equal distance in these three letters ADM: as to the rest I leave it to you to finish.

The placing of Adam in the Garden of Eden.—Adam and Eve were placed in Paradise; his glory was above an angel; the same his wisdom; no angel could call names of all living creatures; but Adam could, and whatever he called them so remained their names until this day. Here Adam enjoyed the blessing of a blessed world ; he knew not what sin was ; he was made pure, and so he continued until Satan (who was at that time a great angel) became jealous of the glory of Adam, and was determined to bring him down : down he came with his band ; he succeeded ; the man fell ; Adam, Eve, Satan, all three were found guilty ; Satan was cast out ; Adam and Eve were driven out ; before they left paradise, the Lord made a promise to the man, saying, Near the end of 6000 years, thy glory shall be restored unto thee ; but thou, O Satan, at that very time thou shalt be destroyed ; as it is written, He will swallow up death for ever. Isaiah xxv. 8.

The Lord said to Satan, Thou hast deceived the man, and thou Adam, thou hast followed his advice ; get you both out, march away together, fight it out, and he who shall overcome Satan, him will I make great in the last day. Paradise was shut up, and cherubims were placed at the east of the garden to keep the way of the tree of life. Here ended the first world, and now we shall go to the second world.

Adam began to wander, and Satan at his heels ; Eve brought forth Cain and Abel ; Satan was bent to make the best use of his profession ; he observed that two new men appeared in the world ; he immediately went to work, and succeeded again ; he helped Cain to slay his innocent brother Abel.

There passed away 1656 years, that is from Adam until Noah ; few were those men that overcame Satan, and at last he destroyed the whole world, except Noah and his family that were saved. Thus far we have read in the great drawings, intermixed with a few traditions.

From the flood until the building of the Tower of Babylon.—After the flood, the Lord said to Noah and his family, From hence and further ye may eat flesh. The Lord also gave them a short law, which consisted only of seven commandments.

THE LAW OF NOAH.—1. Not to commit idolatry. 2. Not to blaspheme. 3. To appoint and constitute just and upright judges, that justice might be maintained, and impartially administered to all. 4. Not to commit incest. 5. Not to commit murder. 6. Not to rob or steal. 7. Not to eat a member of a living creature.

These seven commandments are the law given to Noah and his family, to keep and observe them, from that time and further; and every one that is not of Israel is bound to keep this short law, and every one that observes them is intitled to happiness.

The building of the tower. The children of Shem, Ham, and Japhet, were seventy families; after they were scattered each of them became a nation. There is a tradition, that of these seventy families, twenty-nine were destroyed by a flood, and no more remained than forty-one. Afterwards the number of seventy nations was again completed, by the children of Keturah, who were twelve families, and sixteen of Ishmael, and Edom.

Proof that there were no more than seventy nations.—1. In page 34, it is already mentioned, that as many of Israel as went into Egypt with Jacob, which were 70 in number; so many nations there were to be in the whole world, and no more. When the most high divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. Deut. xxxii. 8.

2. In the fifteenth day of the seventh month, i. e. Tishri, or Ethonim, ye shall offer unto the Lord thirteen young bullocks. The second day twelve bullocks: the third day ye shall offer eleven bullocks; on the fourth day ten bullocks: on the fifth day nine bullocks: on the sixth day eight bullocks; and on the seventh day seven bullocks. Numbers xxix. 12, 13, 17, 20, 23, 26, 29, 32.

These offerings were offered at the feast of Tabernacles for all the seventy nations, and here you find also the number of seventy bullocks. But on the eighth day, ye shall have a solemn assembly: ye shall do no servile work therein: and ye shall offer only one bullock. ver. 35. Here we observe, when Israel hath finished the offering for all nations, then they were commanded to offer only one bullock for all Israel. All these things we find in the great drawing, or properly, the law.

ABRAHAM AND HIS FAMILY.—Next we find recorded in the drawing, that a man by the name of Abraham was to appear in this world, and that he should be the favourite of God, and above all men, and so it came to pass. Next is recorded, that God will make a covenant with this man, and that he and his seed after him were chosen to be his peculiar people, not for a time, but for ever; not Ismael, nor the sons of Keturah, neither Edom; for so it is recorded in the drawing, For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special nation unto himself, above all nations that are upon the face of the earth. Deut. vii. 6. In a sub-drawing it is also mentioned. O ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob his chosen. Psalm cv. 6. Next we find that the seed of Abraham was to be in bondage in a strange land 400 years, and after that he would give them a land, and so it came to pass. We also find that his children, when they were only seventy in number, went down into Egypt. Their father Jacob went with them. The good father Jacob fell ill; he assembled his twelve sons to give them his blessing before his departure from this world; he blessed every one, but one of his sons he made Lord over all his brethren, which was Judah. The foundation of all their blessing is depending on one single verse.

The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh came, and unto him shall the gathering of the nations be. Gen. xlix. 10.

The Gentiles have laid hold on this passage; they say that this passage is a proof that the Messiah is come already, because the sceptre is departed from Judah; but I say, they are mistaken, and here is the proof. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession. Genesis xvii. 8. And I will perform the oath which I swore unto Abraham, thy father. Genesis xxvi. 3. And I will give this land to thy seed after thee for an everlasting possession. Genesis xlviii. 4. The Gentiles here do not only contradict Abraham and Isaac, but also Jacob. In one place, Jacob says, the land is given to his seed for ever; and in the next, he says, the sceptre is to depart, both of them cannot be true.

Here I may ask this question of a learned man of the Gentiles; the Lord promised the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, and you will say the sceptre departed from Judah; can these two questions be true or not? You will say, they must be both true, because they are the word of God; but the question will be, how will you reconcile these two passages? you have no other way to reconcile them, except you say the land was promised conditionally, and, if you say so, you speak the truth, for so it was conditionally. The condition was, that Israel shall have the land, but they must observe the law of God; but Israel did not observe, the land was again taken away from them, now 1746 years.

THE LAND OF CANAAN CONDITIONALLY.—Ye shall therefore keep my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them: that the land whither I bring you to dwell therein, spue you not out. Levit. xx. 22. The Lord shall bring thee, and thy king which thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, &c. If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book. Deut. xxviii. 36. 58. Here you may learn that to have the land of Canaan, always depended on the law. And next you may observe, that the sceptre is the land, and the land is the sceptre ; for so long as any nation has a country of their own, they also have a sceptre ; but when their country is taken away, both of them must be lost together. And lastly, it cannot here be said that the Messiah is come because, the sceptre has departed from Judah : for here it is already proved, that the land and sceptre were conditionally given ; and therefore the land and sceptre were taken away when Israel did not observe the law ; and if there is no law, there is no land nor sceptre. And by this proof, it is clearly shewn that the Messiah is not yet come.

The true explanation of this prophecy.—Jacob said to his sons, The sceptre shall not depart from Judah ; that is, the king over all Israel shall be always out of the tribe of Judah, and as long as Israel shall obey the law, the sceptre shall remain in the nation, even until Shiloh come ; which is to say, although the king over Israel should have no power over any other nation, yet, Israel shall remain always a nation, and be governed by their own king, even until Shiloh come ; and when Shiloh shall come, then he will not be king over Israel only, but over all nations. But if Israel will not keep the law, then the land will be taken away from them, then they will have no land, nor a king ; but its departure shall not be for ever, for there is an appointed time for Shiloh when he is to come, and then the kingdom shall be restored to Israel, and all these words recorded here shall come to pass.

In one of the sub-drawings, 2 Kings xxv. we are told that the king and people, and the land, fell together, and both king and people went together into captivity ; and in the same manner as they went out into captivity, even in the same manner they will return, and this we can prove, that when Shiloh shall come, he shall not come alone by himself, but in the head of all Israel; and so it is written in another of the sub-drawings, The breaker is come up before them: they have broken up, and have passed through the gate, and are gone out by it: and their king shall pass before them, and the Lord on the head of them. Micah ii. 13.

The argument of the Gentiles, that the sceptre has departed from Judah—Considering that Shiloh is come already. Take notice what I shall say here: they say that Jesus was the son of David, and that he was Shiloh; the question will be, when did the sceptre depart? If he was king over Israel, then the sceptre never departed, nay, not even one day, for he was king of Judah, and the son of David, and in the nation of Israel, and in the land of Canaan; is not this a clear proof that the sceptre never departed?

Here the reader will be surprised to see that the whole of their argument is merely nothing; for if they say it is departed, it is false, and they only contradict themselves; because, according to their own statement; it has never departed yet; but if they say it is not departed, even this cannot be true, because the whole world know it is departed?

Question. Was Abraham ignorant of the coming of Shiloh?—What Jacob knew, Isaac knew, and Abraham also knew that Shiloh was to come. It is recorded in the drawing in Genesis xiv. that war will commence among the sons of Adam, and so it came to pass.

The Battle of the four kings with Abraham.—When these four kings had taken Lot prisoner, Abraham took his servants, which were in number 318, and with this little army he pursued them, conquered all the four kings, and recovered his brother's son Lot, and all his fortune.

A little while after this, the Lord appeared to Abraham in a vision, saying, Fear not, Abraham; I am thy shield and thy exceeding great reward: here a son was promised to him, and also the land of Canaan. Further the Lord said unto him, I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee.

Abraham was informed also that his seed should be in bondage 400 years, in a land that was not theirs, and afterwards they should be called the chosen people of God. Also that there should arise four empires, and they should have the dominion over this world, and that the seed of Abraham should be scattered among them, and that these four empires should have the dominion over the seed of Abraham, until Shiloh should come.

The four Empires were shewn to Abraham. And he said to Abraham, Take an heifer, of three years old, and a she-goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtle-dove, and a young pigeon: and he divided them in the midst, but the bird divided he not. And when the sun was going down, a deep sleep fell upon Abraham; and lo, an horror of great darkness fell upon him. Gen. xv. 9. 12. In the shape of an heifer, Abraham saw Babylon: in the shape of a she-goat, he saw Persia and Media: in the shape of a ram, he saw Alexander the Great: in the shape of a turtle he saw the Romans: in the shape of a bird, he saw his family of Israel.

When Abraham observed the miserable state of his family, their long captivity, their great sufferings under the power of these four Empires, he thought to himself, how is it possible for them to bear so long a captivity? But when he saw that it must be so, he took them and cut each of them into two pieces, and laid one piece against the other. The farther to relieve, in some measure, his family, he divided them, that is, he weakened their strength and power, by setting each piece against the other: that these four empires should be always one against the other, and they never should be quiet, but always fighting the one against the other; by so doing the Gentiles will fight one against the other, they now and then will forget Israel, and sometimes they will have no time to meditate against them; this will, in some degree, save them from utter destruction. But did Abraham despair of his family to remain in that miserable state for ever? no, by no means, for Abraham was comforted by his God by a great promise. The Lord said to Abraham, I have given thee a token already, that as well as I have cast down before thee four kings, even so will I do to thy seed in due time, and as well as these four Empires now fell before thee, even their seed that shall be the four Empires in the latter days again shall also fall by thy son Shiloh. Thus far we have found notified in the great drawing, which was ordained and established before the world was created.

Now we must look into the drawing again. Here we have found, and discovered the name of the family of Abraham. Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt. Exod. iii. 10; and thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my first born son. Exod. iv. 22. Although God made a covenant with Abraham, and with his seed for ever, it was still unknown to the world at large; no nation knew who was to be called the first born, but it was now declared to the Gentiles by Moses; And thou shalt say to Pharaoh, Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my first born son.

Suppose a king has a numerous family; will not every one declare that out of the whole family, only one son can be declared the heir to the crown? will not also every man confess that the first born son is the lawful heir? to which will the king give most instruction? certainly to the first born; to which of his family will he communicate all his secrets? to his first born. To which of his sons will he deliver his great seal? to his first born. Thus far it must be acknowledged by every person that only the first born son has a right to the kingdom of his father; but the rest of the family must remain in subjection, and they all must acknowledge him as their lord and king. But the inhabitants of the whole empire must remain to-day the same as they were yesterday; yesterday they were servants, and to-day they must be the same; and so they must remain always.

QUESTION.—Is the first born son born for others, or are the public at large born for him?—Here you must say that his birth made him lord over all, not to obey, but to be obeyed—not to be commanded, but to command—not to be judged, but to judge—not to be equal, but to be above all. Considering all these things, the subjects of the king are by no means born for themselves, but all of them are born to be his servants and to obey his orders as their lord and king. This king is the God of heaven and earth; all the sons of Adam are his subjects; they all are bound to obey him, and to worship him and honour his great name, and to obey his command. Now it pleased him to declare, that Israel is the Prince of this world; he delivered to Israel his great seal, that is, circumcision: he communicated to Israel all his secrets, that is the oracles of God; and saith unto Israel, Ye are the sons of the Lord your God. Deut. xiv. 1. And that all the families of this world should know that Israel was elected and chosen, the Lord gave them his own name, specified in their name. The noun יִשְׂרָאֵל Israel, consists of two words, the first יֵשׁוּר yoshor, signifies righteous; the second word אֵל El, signifies God; and both words together are pronounced Israel, and signify the righteous of God. This name is the crown and glory of Israel, and further the Gentile world should or ought to consider, that to Israel was delivered the great seal of circumcision, and the oracles and the crown. All these things we find recorded in the great drawing of the law, which was prepared before the foundation of this world; and here all the nations may see, and learn, and be convinced, that Israel was chosen and elected before the creation of this world, to be the Lord and king over it; and here all nations witness, that from the time that circumcision was delivered to Abraham, it never ceased, and this very day it is observed just the same, and the oracles are observed just the same, and also the name Israel, declared by Moses, three thousand one hundred years back; and to-day Israel is still Israel, and thus having in possession these three great gifts, is a sufficient proof this very day, that Israel was elected, and shall so remain for ever. It is a vain thing for the Gentiles to grasp at the kingdom of this world; they are not called the sons; and they well know, that a servant or servants have nothing else to do but to obey the order of their lord and master. All that is said here, if considered by the Gentiles, I should like to know their answer; yet I can well imagine it; For if Israel is the Lord of this world, where is then his glory? but we can prove on the contrary, that the Gentiles are the lords of the world and Israel are their servants even until this day. To this I answer, that the wise God did ordain every thing according to his wisdom; he created the first man pure and godly, and so he was, but the man fell. From the creation of Adam until he fell, must be called the godly world; now this godly world ended when Adam was driven out from paradise. The second world commenced, and its proper name is the world of corruption; but in this fallen state it is not to remain for ever; the time is fixed, six thousand years is its number and after this is the end; then the world will recover its former glory and be restored by the Messiah, and then will commence the fifth empire in this world, and its power will extend from one end of this world to the other; the beginning of this fifth empire will be called the third world, or the godly world, or properly the world of the Messiah. His Metropolis will be Jerusalem, and Israel his people; but before these things will take place, the world will stand and be conducted by the Gentiles; Israel is only to wander round about amongst them, and the present feasting belongs only to the Gentiles. Israel has no right, because the feast goes by turn; when the Gentiles shall finish their feast, then will commence the feasting of Israel, and until the appointed day, Israel must not rejoice; for so it is described in one of the sub-drawings, Rejoice not O Israel in the joy of the nations. Hosca ix. 1. Then (that is, when the Messiah shall come) shall our mouth be filled with joy, and our tongue with singing: then the nations shall say, The Lord hath done great things for them. Psalm cxxvi. 2, 3. The Lord hath done great things for us in past times, then we were rejoicing, but now Israel is rejoicing.

Thus far it is described that this world from its beginning is to be divided into three divisions; the first, godly; the second, corrupt; and the third again to be restored to its former glory.

THE WILDERNESS.—One question we may ask, which is,—Why was the law given in a desert? Why not in the land of Israel? The answer is, that, although the law is the inheritance of Israel, yet any nation, if they choose, may claim a right to it, and say the law is given in a free place, and every one that will have a share of it must be accepted; and on this account the law is given in a desert, which is a free place to every one, even so the law is free to every one who will come under her protection, and Israel is bound to accept any of the nations.

THE SABBATH.—Next we find in the drawing, that the Lord himself spoke to the whole nation of Israel, and said to them, Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy. Exod. xx. 8. Here Israel was commanded to keep this day holy, in commemoration of the creation of the world; also in commemoration of the coming out of the land of Egypt. Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day. Deut. v. 15.

Every person knows that the days of the creation are seven: the first and second day are one pair; the third and fourth are again a pair; the fifth and sixth a third pair; the Sabbath remained single; this last day received a blessing, but not the former days; although the Sabbath was the last, yet it was made lord over the other days, because the world was not complete until the Sabbath came, and then the world was completely finished. It is already mentioned in pages 34 and 50, that this world was to produce seventy nations; in this number we also find thirty-five pair, but there was no pair for Israel. When Jacob and his family went down into Egypt, at that very time the seventy nations appeared in this world already. Israel was the last nation in this world.

The World compared to a Ship without a Rudder.—That is, although the ship is finished, yet still it must be considered of no use without a rudder, for it is well known that the rudder is the only piece by which the whole ship is steered. Just the same was the condition of the seventy nations; but when Israel was formed a nation they completed the world to its full number; now the world was completed in creation and in number; Israel was the rudder of the ship, and for the first time they brought the whole ship in motion. Still the ship was not yet able to steer without danger for want of a compass, and that the ship should be entirely complete in every direction a compass was also given. This compass was the law of Moses, the Lord himself thought all Israel the foundation of it, which was the ten Commandments. The Lord said, Ye are the last of all nations, by you my world is finished, and you shall be the first and lord over all the rest, as it is written; And to make thee high above all nations which he hath made, in praise and in name, and in honour; that thou mayest be an holy nation unto the Lord thy God, as he hath spoken. Deut. xxvi. 19. At the same time Israel stood single, then the Lord said, The last day of the creation I have blessed, and made it lord over the rest; ye also are the last of all nations, and I have blessed you already; come then and be ye two, a blessed pair together, and thus ye shall remain a couple for ever: and here the whole world will confess, that from that time until this day Israel has never forsaken his pair. Thus far it is shewn, that before the world was created, Israel and the Sabbath was to be a pair; also all the feasts shall be called Sabbaths, for so we find it in the great drawing. One feast is the Passover, also called Sabbath; And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath. The second feast is the Pentecost, also called Sabbath; Even unto the morrow after the seventh. Next comes the New year, also called Sabbath; In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a Sabbath. Next comes the tenth day, or the day of atonement, also called Sabbath; It shall be unto you a Sabbath. Next comes the feast of Tabernacles, also called Sabbath; On the first day shall be a Sabbath. Levit. xxiii. 15, 16. 20, 32. 39. After all that has been said, here is a proof that before the world was created, Israel and the Sabbath were blessed, and coupled together to be a pair for ever, and to be lords over all the things which God created. The first Sabbath was also a type of the great Sabbath, and known by the name of Millennium, and properly means the reign of the Messiah upon earth.

The opinion of the Gentiles concerning the Sabbath.— If I say to one of the Gentiles, what do you think about the law of Moses? he will answer me thus, the law is abolished; then if I ask him the whole of it, or only part? he then will say, I am a Gentile, we are bound to observe only the moral law, which is the ten Commandments; then I say,—answer this question; Is not the Sabbath one of the ten Commandments? then he will answer me thus; I, as a Gentile, keep the first day, and that is my proper Sabbath.

This observation wants consideration, every one knows that the first day is called a working day, and the Lord of heaven and earth made it, and began on it to work; the question will be, who is he that will stand up and contradict the Lord over all? he said, The first day shall be a labouring day, and somebody got up and said, I say the contrary, it shall be called the Sabbath. Now the question is, who is the person that will dare to call holy that which the Lord called unholy? it cannot be said that the Gentile Messiah commanded it; do Christians derive it from what Paul said? Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

Here the question will be, are men to obey the command of God, or the command of the apostle Paul? It is already noticed that the Sabbath is a type of the Millennium, but what is the first day to typify? Now, according to the law, the Gentiles have nothing else to do but observe the law of Noah, already mentioned in page 50; they have no right to keep holy that which is not holy, but if any one will keep a Sabbath, he must then keep the Sabbath of the Lord : it is also mentioned in page 50, that all the feasts are called Sabbaths ; then it will follow that he who will be an observer of the Sabbath must observe also all the feasts and must keep the whole law ; but we see that the Gentiles act contrary to the will of God, they will have a Sabbath on a working day ; and here it may be asserted that the Millennium will be only for those who observe the Sabbath ; as for the Gentiles, they shall work then on the Sabbath even as they do now.

THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.—And this shall be a statute for ever unto you ; that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country or the stranger that sojourneth among you : for on that day the priest makes an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord : it shall be a Sabbath of rest unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls, by a statute for ever ; and this shall be an everlasting statute unto you, to make an atonement for the children of Israel for all their sins once a year. Lev. xvi. 29, 30, 31. 34.

In page 32 it is mentioned, that Moses was convinced that Israel would be dispersed among the Gentiles, and therefore he gave them direction how to steer, that they might recover their ancient glory : he never told them to sacrifice any thing in their dispersion, but informed them that they had nothing else to do, but to return unto the Lord by true repentance, and then the Lord would restore them. But here the Jew will ask the question, are we left destitute in our dispersion of a tabernacle, or of a temple, or of sacrifices ? No, for even this very day we have a temple, and we have also sacrifices. Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God ; Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come. Ezek. xi. 16. Here you see that our Synagogues are still the temples of the Lord.

SACRIFICES.—The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit. Psalm li. 17. O, Israel! return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity. Take with you words, and turn to the Lord; say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously; so will we render the calves of our lips. Hosea xiv. 1, 2. Now, when the day of atonement comes, we all go into our little sanctuary; there we continue the whole day, we fast the whole day, the whole day is spent in prayers. Thus we are ordered to do, and so we do year by year; and here is the forgiveness of all the sins of Israel once a year. Thus far is shewn to the Gentiles, that Israel has this very day a temple, also sacrifices. The Gentiles, perhaps, will say, if so, why is then Israel not restored to her former glory?

Take notice of what follows: It is already mentioned in page 48, that the proper Messiah will come in due time; and in page 50 it is stated that there were to be in this world only seventy nations. These seventy nations were formed at the building of the Tower of Babylon. At that time Abraham was forty-eight years old. From that time until the Lord made a covenant with Abraham, were twenty-two years; thus was Abraham seventy years old. Here Abraham represents the seventy of his family that afterwards went down into Egypt, see page 50; And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel. Num. xi. 16. This number remained in Israel until the second temple was destroyed. These seventy were the first Sanhedrin, and Moses the Lord over them, the same as the Sanhedrin above; the seventy angels that stand in the presence of the Lord are called the heavenly Sanhedrin.

At that time when the sons of Adam had one language only, they began to be rebellious. The Lord said to his Sanhedrin, Let us go down, and there confound their language; the seventy families shall be divided by lot: and thus every angel became a guardian angel to that family, which was afterwards a nation. Abraham fell to the lot of God, as it is written, For the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. Deut. xxxii. 9. But here it should be known, that the lot of God was as much in number as that of all his seventy Sanhedrin, for so it is written, Deut. xxxii. 8. see page 50. And that every nation has a prince in heaven, is confirmed by the prophet: And now will I return to fight with the prince of Persia: and when I am gone forth, lo, the prince of Grecia shall come. Daniel. x. 20.

David, the father of the Messiah, lived only seventy years.

The captivity of Babylon was seventy years.

From the birth of David, until the desolation of the temple of Solomon was seventy weeks.

From the destruction of the first temple, to the destruction of the second temple, was also seventy weeks. Daniel ix. 24.

It ought to be observed that this number of seventy, so much made use of, is not a vain thing; but it will instruct us to understand that the sons of Noah, only divided into seventy nations, should represent seventy jubilees; that is, from the time of the covenant, made with Abraham, until the coming of the Messiah, and in the end of this number shall commence the Jubilee of Israel.

These seventy jubilees are to be divided into two divisions: the commencement of the first half, or thirty-five, began by the covenant, and ended by the desolation of the second temple:

	Years.
ACCOUNT. —From the covenant until the law	430
Israel had the land in possession only	850
From the desolation of the first to the end of the second temple	490
N. B. This number will amount to thirty-five jubilees, and twenty years. Total	1770

From the desolation of the second temple, until this present year (1812) is the number of 1745

This last number, of the dispersion of Israel, is just now thirty-five jubilees. Both sums will amount to 3520 years, or the sum of seventy jubilees, and above twenty years.

By this calculation, we may learn, that the jubilee of the restoration of Israel has begun already these twenty years back, that is, just when the revolution began in France; at that very time, the seventy jubilees were at an end. There are yet thirty-six years to the end of the jubilee of Israel, AND BEFORE THE END OF THESE THIRTY-SIX YEARS, ISRAEL WILL BE RESTORED, AND THE MESSIAH WILL TAKE POSSESSION OF HIS EMPIRE.

Israel is separated for ever from all Nations.—I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other nations; and ye shall be holy unto me, for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from the nations, that ye should be mine. Lev. xx. 24. 26. For, from the top of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him: lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations. Numbers xxiii. 9. For all the nations will walk every one in the name of his God, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God, for ever and ever. Micah iv. 5.

Whoever considers these passages, may see, first, that Israel will never be mixed with the Gentiles; and secondly, that all the Gentiles will not worship the true God even until the last day.

Moses foretold of the coming of the Gentile Messiah.

—Christians adduce this prophecy: I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth: and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. Deut. xiv. 18. We read in the same book, And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face. Deut. xxxiv. 10.

The Christians say that their Messiah was superior to Moses: but how will they reconcile these two passages? for they say the first passage means their Messiah. But what will they do with the second passage, which is, that there will never be another prophet equal to Moses. Further, this prophet is not to speak with God face to face; for here the text says, I will put my words in his mouth: that is, he shall prophesy by a vision, or in a dream. Again, what honour is this for the Messiah to be styled a prophet, for the honour of the high priest goes before a prophet, as we find it written: And King David said, Call me Zadock the priest, and Nathan the prophet. And let Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, anoint him there king over Israel. 1 Kings i. 32. 34. Here it may be seen that the title of high priest is above that of a prophet; next is to be known that the Messiah is nowhere styled a prophet, but either a judge, or a ruler, or a king; also, that when the Messiah shall come, he will have nothing to prophesy, because his coming will accomplish all the prophecies.

But after all, we ask, was Jesus a prophet or not? If he was a prophet, we must examine what he prophesied.

Prophecies of Jesus.—The destruction of the temple is foretold in Matthew xxiv. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. Luke xxi.

24. What shall I say here, is it possible for mankind to call these passages prophecies? they may lawfully be called quotations from the prophets; and here I shall bring forward sufficient evidence to shew that these prophecies are no more than quotations from the writings of the Old Testament. Jesus says, Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left here one stone upon another. Mark xxiv. 2. We shall go backward as far as to David, and enquire of him if he knew any thing about the fate of the first or second temple. By the river of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion. Psalm cxxxvii. 1. Here is the destruction of the first temple. Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem, who said, Rase it, rase it, even to the foundation thereof. Psalm cxxxvii. 7. Here is the desolation of the second temple by Edom. Thus far we have produced one faithful witness, to shew that Christ was no prophet, but his words are only taken from this Psalm.

Seventy weeks are 490 years, that is, from the destruction of the first temple to the desolation of the second shall be no more than 490. Dan. ix. 24.

Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars. Zech. xi. 1. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led captive into all nations. Luke xxi. 24. This passage also is no more than a quotation. Therefore he lifted up his hand against them, to overthrow them in the wilderness: to overthrow. Psalm cvi. 26, 27. Also, And will draw out a sword after you: their seed also among the nations, and to scatter them in the lands. Leviticus xxvi. 33. The Lord doth build up Jerusalem: the outcasts of Israel he shall gather. Psalm cxlvii. 2. I lifted up mine head unto them also in the wilderness, that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries. Ezekiel xx. 23. For lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve; yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth. Amos ix. 9.

Another great prophecy of Jesus.—Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. Matthew xxiv. 34. Until this day, now above 1800 years, this passage is not yet fulfilled; whereas he fixed the time to his generation; and in the same manner may be refuted all the rest of his prophecies; but I think the above proofs are sufficient to convince the reader that he was no prophet. But the true sense of this prophecy shall be here given, that by it it will be known that it has no reference at all to the Messiah.

I will raise them up a prophet.—When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord: and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee. Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God. For these nations, which thou shalt possess, hearken unto observers of times, and unto diviners; but as for thee, the Lord thy God hath not suffered thee so to do. The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken. Deuteronomy xviii. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. Thus far Moses taught Israel, that when they should inherit the land, they must not learn the abominations of the Gentiles, for you shall have no occasion; because the Lord your God will always raise for you prophets from the midst of you; therefore any thing what thou shalt wish to know, thou shalt go to him and he shall tell thee.

Perhaps some person will ask, why is it then in the singular number a prophet, and why not prophets?

It is well known that we have two laws: the one is called the written law, which is the Old Testament; the second is called the oral law, and both of these Moses received upon Mount Sinai. This oral law was always delivered to the successor of the first; Moses received of God, Joshua of Moses.

From Joshua, to Samuel the prophet, were twelve judges, and every one of these twelve was a receiver of the oral law; this receiver was called also the Nassi, or president of his Sanhedrin; Joshua delivered the oral law to Othniel, the son of Kenaz; and the last of these twelve was Eli, the high priest.

The first of the prophets that received the oral law was Samuel, he received it of Eli, the high priest. 2. Nathan, the prophet. 3. Ahijah, the Shilonite. 4. Elijah, the Tishbite. 5. Elisha, the son of Shaphat. 6. Hosea, the son of Beeri. 7. Amos, a herdsman of Tekoa. 8. Isaiah, the son of Amoz. 9. Micah, the Morasthite. 10. Joel, the son of Pethuel. 11. Jeremiah, the son of Hilkiah. 12. Ezekiel, the son of Buzi, the priest.

Thus far goes the account of those Prophets that received the oral law, in the time of the FIRST TEMPLE.

Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi; these three prophets were in the time of the SECOND TEMPLE: Malachi was the last of all the prophets, and he is also the great seal of the Old Testament; and from this we learn that there shall be no more a prophet in Israel until the restoration of Israel, Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. Mal. iv. 5. Next will be shewn, that in the time of every prophet that received the oral law, were many prophets, but all of them were called only the disciples of him who was the receiver; and he was the Lord over them all, the same as Moses was over his Sanhedrin ; and each receiver was as God in his age, as Moses in his age. When Samuel anointed Saul he said unto him,—Thou shalt meet a company of prophets. 1 Sam. x. 5. And the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings ii. 3. What, shall I set this before an hundred men ? 2 Kings iv. 43. these were his disciples.

It is well known that Moses was the lord of all the prophets, and the seventy elders, or his Sanhedrin were all prophets ; yet not one of them is mentioned, but only Moses : what Moses desired of God, it was granted ; what Samuel desired of God, it was granted ; what Elijah desired of God, it was granted ; what Elisha desired of God it was granted ; and in the same manner all the rest : here it may be seen, that every one of these prophets was as good in his age as Moses was in his, and this is what God said to Moses. And the Lord said unto me, They have well spoken that which they have spoken. I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee. Deut. xviii. 17, 18. Thus far it is proved that this prophecy has no reference whatever to the Messiah. The spring of prophecy was opened by Moses, and sealed up again by Malachi, and shall remain so until the Messiah shall come, and then the seal will be taken away, and prophecy will be restored to Israel, and will cease no more, for so it is written : And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh : and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions. And I will shew wonders in the heavens, and in the earth, &c. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come. Joel ii. 28, 30, 31. And before all these things shall come to pass, the prophet Elijah will be sent to Israel, and afterwards will come the great and terrible day of the Lord.

GALATIANS.—For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. chap. iii. 10. This quotation from Deut. xxvii. 26. we read thus in the English version, Cursed be he that confirmed not all the words of this law to do them. This passage is of great consequence with the Gentiles, for by it they prove that if a person observes many of the commandments of the law, yet is he under the curse, because it is written, all of them must be done. We are at liberty to search the truth, and commanded also to speak nothing but the truth. Considering this, we must first examine if the above statement is true; if it shall be found true, it certainly must remain so; but if it should be found false, then lawfully we may say it is not true. But before we proceed to the examination, we must first make some preliminary remarks. Any thing that is known to the world at large cannot be denied. The miracles wrought by the hand of Moses in Egypt, by the Red Sea, in the Wilderness for the space of forty years, are recorded in the great drawing of the law, and now known to the world at large. God delivered to Moses six hundred and thirteen commandments, and these commandments are called the law. God said to Moses, Teach my people Israel this law, that they may know to worship their God; Moses did as he was commanded. Further it should be known, that some of these commandments could be observed by no other person except by a prophet; some by the High Priest; some were the duty of the Levites; some the duty of a judge. Here will arise a question, how could he who was not a prophet, or he who was not a high priest, or he who was not of the tribe of Levi, or he who was not a judge, observe all these commandments? Secondly, a Jew is commanded that if his wife brings forth a son he must be circumcised when eight days old, but when his wife was barren, he could not perform this command. Thirdly, If the son was a first born, the father was obliged to bring the child before the priest when he was thirty days old, and to redeem his first born by paying five shekels; but if his wife brought forth the first child a girl, this command could not be observed.—Fourthly, If his wife brought forth no sons but daughters, then he could not observe either the one or the other.—Fifthly, If a Jew had a brother, and he died and left no child, then the command is, that the living brother must marry her: now if a Jew has no brother, how can he observe this command? or if his brother left children, then he could not marry her. There are numbers more of the same kind, that could not be observed, except in particular instances, and the few here mentioned are sufficient for the present purpose.

We must now hear the instruction of Moses. Moses says, If thou hast a son he must be circumcised. One of the Jews cried out, Lord Moses, I never can observe this command. Moses said to him, Why? He said, Because I never had a son. Another Jew came to Moses, crying, and said, Lord Moses, I and my family are for ever undone. Moses said to him, Why so? He said, I wish to go into the tabernacle, and if I go there, thou wilt order to kill me, because it is written, And the stranger that cometh into the tabernacle shall be put to death. Numbers iii. 10. Now if I do not perform this command, I remain under the curse, because this is one of the commandments of the law. Another Jew came before Moses, and said, Thou hast given us a law which will make us miserable for ever. Moses said, My son, why so? He answered and said, Because I never was a judge in Israel, and I cannot do this command which is one of the law. Another came and cried out, I am undone. Moses said, Why so, my son? He said, If I had a brother, and he had died without children, I should have married his wife, which is one command of our law; but alas, I never had a brother, and now I shall remain under the curse of the law, because I cannot perform all the commandments. A woman came before Moses; she cried and said, I am not able to support myself for grief. My daughter, said the good Moses, what is your trouble? She answered and said, We are commanded to keep the commandments of the law, and there is one particular command in the law of jealousies: When a wife goeth aside to another instead of her husband, and is defiled. Num. v. 29. Master Moses what shall I do, if I go and defile myself, I then must come before the priest, and must drink the bitter water by which I for certain shall die; and if I keep honest I am not the better, because I remain under the curse of the law, because I cannot perform this command; what shall I do now? A virgin, the daughter of a priest, came before Moses; she said to him, Lord Moses, be so good as to give me your advice. Moses said, What hast thou to say, my daughter? she said, I have read one command in the law, which is, And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself by playing the whore, she profaneth her father, she shall be burnt in fire. Lev. xxi. 9. What shall I do now? I am standing between two fires. This is one commandment of the law. If I go and play the whore, thou wilt order me to be burnt in fire; but, if I keep honest, I am not better, because I shall remain under the curse of the law; and I consider the one is fire, but the other worse than fire, for here I shall live all the days of my life under a curse, and die under the curse.

A Question for the Christians to answer.—If I ask them, if God is just, they all will say, Yes; but what will they say to the above statement; has God given a law to his chosen people that they should be under a curse? God said, This command a priest shall do, and if an Israelite should do it he must die ; and because he obeyed the command of God, he must remain under a curse. God said, Thy son shall be circumcised ; but God never gave him a son, and therefore he must remain under the curse. The virgin did not play the whore, but kept honest ; and her reward is to abide under a curse. If this should be true, could God be called a true God ? I long to hear the answers to these things. But what can they answer ? Nothing ; they must confess that God is just in all his ways ; and if so, their whole argument is false.

PROOF.—First, it ought to be known that Paul did not quote this passage to the Jews, but to the Galatians ; and here he took the advantage of the ignorant Gentiles to inform them of things that are not true. For any person that knows the original Hebrew, will see at once that what I have said is true. I shall quote here again the whole verse as it is in the Hebrew : Cursed be he that confirmeth not the words of this law to do them, which is to say, that he must do and observe all those commandments that he can, and which may be done. But Paul, to deceive the Gentiles, inserted the word all ; this word was of great use to him, for by it he preached a whole sermon, and the whole of his text depended upon this word. But what is most surprising, is to see at this very day, the Christians bringing forward this passage as a great proof against the Jews, that they are under the curse, because they cannot observe all the commandments of the law ; at the very same time the Christians confess that a Jew is bound to observe only those commandments which he may observe lawfully ; and here is the proof. In the English version, the word all is put in italic letters, to shew that the word all is not in the text. The question will now be, if the word all is not in the text, how came they to take the liberty with the law of God thus far ? Have they inserted the word all to please Paul, and to give offence to God? I maintain that the English version has done wrong in inserting the word all; but wonderful it is, and a marvellous thing in our eyes, to see, that even to-day they insist that it shall be so, right or wrong. But what will they say in the day of judgment, when they shall be called upon to answer for this offence? Let them only take notice what God said to Joshua, This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then shalt thou make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success. Joshua i. 8. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. Then he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of waters, &c. Psalm i. 2, 3. Great peace have they which love thy law; and nothing shall offend them. Psalm cxix. 165. And God said unto Balaam, Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the people: for they are blessed. Numbers xxii. 12.

Conclusion. The blessed God blessed his people Israel for ever, that is, in giving them his blessed law, by which they will inherit everlasting life, and to every one of the Gentiles that comes to hide himself under the wings of that law.

The finishing of the Law.—Happy art thou, O Israel: who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy excellency! and thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee; and thou shalt tread upon their high places. Deut. xxxiii. 29.

QUESTION RESPECTING THE DISPERSION OF ISRAEL.—If Israel offended their God, and if they were found guilty, why was their sentence of punishment to be scattered? Why did not their God keep them at home in their own land, and punish them as he had done in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes? Israel might have been in their own land, and still have been subjected to one or another of the Gentile nations. And they might have been slaves in their own country, and have pined away in their iniquity, and in the iniquity of their fathers; and so it might have been done until this day. But we see that a home punishment would not answer the purpose of God, and hence we may plainly learn that some great thing will proceed at last from this dispersion.

Perhaps some person will say, no such thing, and that when Israel was scattered in their sin, they offended their God, and he became their enemy. This kind of reasoning is not well founded; for if God should have become the enemy of Israel, he must have become the enemy of all nations. But we find the contrary; God loves his world; he is merciful to all his creatures; and the dispersion of Israel is also mercy and kindness; and, as far as I am able to learn, I consider that the dispersion of Israel is to answer two purposes; the one, to suffer for the sins of their fore-fathers and for their own; the other, to convert all the Gentile world to the true worship of the only God of Israel, and the whole of this matter shall be explained at large.

I. God created this world that he should be worshipped by all his creatures, and that all of them should acknowledge him only as a God, and none else. But his greatest glory, due only to him, was despised; and, instead of paying adoration to God, they set up a stone, and a bone, a wood, the sun, the moon, the dead, the living; every thing they set up for gods. Thus the true God was robbed of his glory, in his own world, and by his own creatures. But will this kind of rebellion continue for ever? no, by no means, the time is fixed when it shall end. The world was created by order, and that every thing must keep his order; the great drawing of the law teaches, and shews to us, that every thing in this world is to proceed regularly, and that every thing has an appointed time.

When the world at large became rebellious in the time of the confusion of languages, Abraham was the only man that was found just in the sight of God. On this account, he and his seed were chosen to be the ministers of God, and at last to bring back the ruined Gentiles. It was also foretold to Abraham, that his seed, on this account, must be scattered among all nations; all this was told to Abraham; but there was also the time fixed when Israel should be made to know it. When Israel made the molten calf, that was the time to make it known, but the sentence is not yet past.

When the spies returned, and brought a bad report, Joshua and Caleb informed the people that the land was very good; but their good report was disbelieved, and all the people gave ear to falsehood, and all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night. Numbers xiv. 1. The day when the spies returned was the ninth day of the month Ab, or August. The Lord said, the land is very good, according as it was reported by Joshua and Caleb; but still they would not believe the good report, but they rather believed lies, and they wept for nothing. But pronounce unto the congregation, that this night is recorded already, that it shall remain for a weeping night in Israel, and that for ages. In this night was burnt the first and second temple.

This bad report of the spies, in conjunction with that of the molten calf, finished the perfection of the sentence. And here was passed the sentence, that Israel should be scattered among all the seventy nations, but when it was to begin was not told them; and that this sentence was passed in the desert, is confirmed by two witnesses; the one, Therefore he lifted up his hand against them to overthrow them in the desert : to overthrow their seed also among the nations, and to scatter them in the lands. Psalm cvi. 26, 27. I lifted up mine hand unto them also in the wilderness, that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries. Ezekiel xx. 23.

The commencement of the dispersion remained a mystery unto the Lord until the time of Daniel. Daniel, the prophet, was the man appointed for that errand; he did what he was commanded in pronouncing the sentence of the general dispersion: Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city; that is, 490 years shall yet pass away before the beginning thereof, which is from the destruction of the first temple until the desolation of the second temple, and then will be the general dispersion.

2. We shall return again, to observe the nature of a worldly kingdom. A king that has a large country, and all whose subjects are faithful, yet it would be impossible for him to make every subject for a minister; but the king will choose only one set of men, and such men as he knows are qualified for that office; and to his ministers he will give instruction, and whatever the king will communicate to the public at large, he makes it known unto his ministers, and then they publish it to the public at large; also all the secrets of the king are only communicated to his ministers.

In the same manner the Lord did proceed; all the nations were his subjects, the whole of this world was his empire; he could not make all the seventy nations ministers, but out of all he chose only one family, and called him by the name of his first-born son, Israel; knowing that they only are fit to be entrusted with his secrets. Therefore he said unto Israel, Come, follow me in a secret place, that is, the wilderness; Israel followed him, and there he appeared to them, and spoke with them face to face, and there he told him all his secrets; he also charged them to write down in a book some part of his secrets; as for the rest, they must not be written in a book, but only kept a secret in our hearts. This was the written law, or the law of Moses; but the oral law was forbidden to be written down, and was only to be delivered from mouth to mouth. The Lord said unto them, Now I have intrusted you with my oracles, from henceforth ye shall be called my ministers, and so it is written: And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation, and so they will remain for ever. Exod. xix. 6.

3. The Christians are pleased to say that they are now the ministers; but this is not true, for the day will come when they shall be obliged to confess and cry out: But ye shall be named the priests of the Lord: men shall call you the ministers of our God. Isaiah lxi. 6. Thus far, it is proved that Israel only are the ministers of God, but not the Gentiles.

4. THE MISCONDUCT OF ISRAEL.—By continually provoking the Lord to anger, in worshipping the false gods of the Gentiles, they continued in their errors until their measure became full, and then they fell; the temple was burnt, the holy land was laid waste, and they were carried away into captivity, even into Babylon.

IDOLATRY TAKEN AWAY FROM ISRAEL.—This is a surprising thing: for from the time they entered Babylon, until this very time, idolatry is an abhorrence to Israel; and from that time until this day, Israel has worshipped nothing else but the true God: to this all the nations are witnesses.

But here we ask how, or by what means, did idolatry cease from Israel? Was it by accident, or was it done by the hand of God? It was certainly not accidental, but was done by the hand of God, for the time drew near for the general dispersion of Israel, when they were to wander among all nations: and, if idolatry had not been taken away from them, Israel would have been soon lost among the nations ; nay, even their very name would have been extinct : therefore the Lord blotted out from the heart of Israel, the desire of worshipping strange gods.

It is well known, that during the time of the second temple, Israel served only the God of their forefathers ; 490 years were given to Israel to prepare for their general dispersion, and all of them were the servants of the true God at that time. The second temple was destroyed, and Israel was scattered abroad, even among all the nations. The Lord said, This is the proper time for my people Israel to begin their ministry : and he said to them, Your fathers have recompensed me evil instead of good. I said unto them, Thou shalt have no other gods before me ; but they soon polluted my command ; they made a molten calf, and worshipped it, and sacrificed thereunto, and said, These be thy gods, O Israel. I then lifted up mine hand unto them, that I would scatter their seed among the Gentiles. Now for the idolatry of your fathers, and your own sins, you shall go abroad and make an atonement ; and the atonement shall be, that you shall preach against idolatry, among the nations. I know you will suffer much, and you must suffer, yea, even a great deal for my name's sake : but never despair ; remember that I have passed my holy word already, to make thee Lord over all the sons of Adam ; and in due time I will fulfil my word. I also will never forget them that shall be kind to you ; but all those families that shall trouble you, they shall receive punishment.

Jews and Gentiles believe that God created the heaven and the earth, and all that is in them ; the Lord created mankind that they should be happy, but the sons of Adam ; turned aside. What was to be done ? they must all return, but there must be some means devised how to bring them all back. Here God acted like a wise husbandman, who, having one bushel of fine wheat, will not keep it concealed ;

for so it never will increase : but he will scatter it abroad, and by so doing he expects a good harvest. And the only seed which was to be scattered was Israel; for they are the ministers, they must preach, but no others; as it is written : This people have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth my praise, but not the Gentiles. Isaiah xliii. 21. And again, O give thanks unto the Lord; call upon his name; make known his deeds among the nations. Psalm ciii. 1. Declare his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all nations. Psalm xciii. 3. Thus far it is proved, that Israel was scattered, first, to suffer, and secondly, to preach to all nations. We ought also to consider, that if Israel were not scattered abroad, and only punished at home in their own land; in the day of judgment, it would be a fine excuse for many of the nations, when the Lord should say, Why have ye despised my honour? I am the only true God, and ye made to yourselves strange gods. Their answer would be a very good one; they would say, Lord, we never had any true instruction. Then he would say, Why did not you go and learn of my people Israel? They would say, Lord, we never heard of Israel; we know not their land, neither the people. By this means, many nations that are afar off from the holy land, would escape punishment. But now no excuse can be made, Israel, the ministers of God, are sown almost in every nation,

5. When Israel was scattered abroad, the nations observed that this people differed from all nations in laws and ceremonies; and one of the nations said to a Jew, Come and take my daughter for a wife : he said, I am forbidden by my law : then he said, Come and eat with me : he answered and said, My law has forbidden me to eat with you. The Gentile said, Give me information in your law. The Jew began to expound to him the law; and thus the Gentiles, in process of time, obtained a considerable knowledge in the Jewish scriptures. Then the Gentiles began to explain those scriptures in a different way ; and because Israel would give no ear to their improper explanation, they began to butcher them ; killing and murdering men, women, and children ; and the property of Israel they divided among themselves. But Israel did not cease to preach, still knowing their duty ; they preached not only in one country, but every where they preached wonderful sermons, and that in every corner of the world. Now this fact, which I have here stated, is acknowledged by all nations ; and in one corner, and in one city, Israel preached a sermon, and his text was, That it was better to die courageously for the law, &c. and, as he said, so it was done. Fifteen hundred of them took knives and stabbed their wives and children ; afterwards, the men set fire to the place wherein they were, and all of them became a burning sacrifice to the law of their God. Such surprising sermons Israel preached in almost every country. But none of the Gentiles, yea, not one nation laid it to heart, saying, What can be the meaning of this people, preaching such shocking sermons ? They must have a good reason for so doing ; and the Gentiles will be undone some day or another ; but this kind of meditation never was thought of.

6. The Gentiles will acknowledge that which I have here mentioned to be true ; but all this Israel suffered for their sins, and their sermons are nothing, because we see that all their preaching had no effect ; and we, until this day, have seen no harvest, not even so much as a beginning ; and we have not seen even yet, that Israel should be the lord over all nations ; but on the contrary, we know the Gentiles are the lords, and Israel are their servants. But remember this, that as long as the bushel of wheat is in being, the time is not passed ; it is well known that the bushel of wheat was cut down in sundry times, yet no sooner was it cut before it grew up again. This must be a clear proof, that at last there will be a harvest ; and at the same time he who will be the gatherer of the harvest will certainly be also the Lord over the whole harvest ; and in spite of all nations they will gain their point at last, and all those nations who despised the ministers of God, shall be glad at last to beg, and to say, O let me go with you, for we have heard that the Lord is with you. Zech. viii. 23.

Although we have proved by Holy Scripture that Israel are the ministers of God, and that he only who is appointed to minister has a right to preach ; yet in spite of the word of God, the Christians will have it that they are the ministers now, and that they are to preach to Israel : and now they are to make the harvest, and to bring back the outcast of Israel to the knowledge of the new law. We know that there is only one holy God, one holy nation, one holy law, one holy land, one holy city : this was engraved on the tables of the great drawing of the law, before the foundation of the world, and so it must remain for ever ; and so we find it recorded ; For I am the Lord, I change not. Malachi iii. 6. Now, if God is not changeable, then it will follow, that every thing must remain as it was ordained from the beginning ; but as concerning the new drawing, or the new law, not a word is mentioned about it in the great drawing of the law. The Christians boast very much about this new law ; and here we shall ask, If their new law permits them to make free with the blood of innocent people ? They cannot say that they are at liberty to do so ; they will say we are commanded not to murder. Now the question will be, how or by what means will they repay the blood of Israel, which they have so gladly and wilfully shed ? They must be found guilty even by their own law ; and even their own law is not able to save them, after they have broken their own law, and profaned the word of God, and stained their hands with innocent blood ; yet they will say they are chosen to be the ministers of God ? and is it possible, that a true God would choose men of this kind? The Lord said, Be ye holy, for I am holy.

8. Perhaps they will say, This was done by our forefathers, but as for us, we were never guilty of shedding the blood of Israel. This is true, but there is a way of killing people without a sword, that is, by continually publishing, and, in it, describing the abominable character of people, that all their actions are enormous; and painting them in such colours as are not fit to be ascribed to man: and this publishing is not only once, but from age to age, even until this very day. It must be acknowledged by all nations, that all this was done, and is done until this very day, to innocent Israel; and this kind of ill-usage may be looked upon as killing them by inches, and worse than killing them at once. What a crime is this; to take advantage of a poor defenceless people, and innocent in every case. Is this conduct becoming people that will say they are sanctified? Whether the offences of the fathers, or those of the sons are greater, I will not determine; but there is one above who will do justice in due time.

THE TITLE OF ISRAEL.—That, for their sake, heaven and earth, sun, moon, and stars are created, and if there is no Israel, no world. Thus saith the Lord, If my covenant be not kept day and night, the ordinances of heaven and earth I would not have placed. Jer. xxxiii. 25. Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; the Lord of Hosts is his name: If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever. Thus saith the Lord; If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord. Jer. xxxi. 35, 36, 37.

Here we notice that Israel, who observes the covenant of God, is the upholder of this world ; for if the law and its commandments are not kept, there is no world. Israel is called the sun, Rachel is called the moon, the twelve tribes are called the stars ; and if the fathers are stars, of course the children also must be stars ; for so it was shewn to Joseph in his dream. Genesis xxxvii. 9. and so they are called : And it cast down some of the host, and the stars to the ground : and stamped upon them ; and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away. Daniel viii. 10. And because all things were created for their sake, therefore they had also the power to command every thing in heaven and on earth, and were obeyed. Moses divided the sea. Joshua said to the sun and moon, stand still. Exodus xiv. 21. x. 12. Elijah commanded fire to come down from heaven. Elisha raised the dead. 2 Kings i. 12. iv. 34, 35. Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself. As the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord ; so shall your seed and your name remain. Isaiah lx. 20. lxvi. 22. They fought from heaven ; the stars in their courses fought against Sisera. Judges v. 20. But still more may be said in behalf of Israel, for their title is above the angels : Though the angels are spirits, yet they are not called the sons of God ; but to Israel it is said, Ye are the children of God.

Again, we do not find that Israel ministered unto the angels, but the angels ministered unto Israel, as it is written : The angel of God which went before the camp of Israel, removed and went behind them. Exodus xiv. 19. And as he lay and slept under a juniper tree, behold, then an angel touched him, and said unto him, Arise and eat : and the angel of the Lord came a second time. 1 Kings xix. 5. 7. For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. Psalm xci. 11.

But when Israel lies in the dust, all the heavenly bodies are in mourning, and the mourning is proclaimed among all the heavenly hosts; for so it is written: It is a day of trouble, and of treading down, &c. In that day the Lord God of Hosts shall call to weeping and to mourning, &c. Behold, the Erellim, or angels, have cried without, i. e. because Israel is without their land; the angels of peace shall weep bitterly. But when Israel shall rise from the dust, they will all shout for joy, as it is written: Sing, O ye heavens; for the Lord hath done it: shout ye lower parts of the earth: break forth into singing, ye mountains, O forests, and every tree therein; for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob. Isaiah xxii. 5, 12. xxxiii. 7. xlv. 23.

10. THE TITLE OF THE GENTILES.—They are called rivers and seas. Woe to the multitude of many nations, which make a noise like the noise of seas; and the rushing of nations, that make a rushing of mighty waters. The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters. Isaiah xvii. 12, 13. And the nations shall be as the burning of lime; as thorns cut up, shall they be burned in the fire. Isaiah xxxiii. 12. All nations before him are as nothing; and they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity. Isaiah xl. 17. And the house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in them, and devour them; and there shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau; for the Lord hath spoken it. Obad. xviii.

THE LAST FORTUNE OF THE GENTILES.—All of them will acknowledge that all the evil pronounced against Israel, by Moses and the prophets, came to pass; and will they not acknowledge also, that the evil which has been pronounced against the Gentiles, must come to pass?

It is now 1774 years since the second temple was burned, and since that time Israel has passed through fire and water, sword and famine; driven from one country to the other; and they are brought down almost equal to the dust. King David, when he saw this long captivity, and the trouble of Israel, cried out, Yea, for thy sake are we killed all the day long; we are counted as sheep for the slaughter. Awake, why sleepest thou, O Lord? arise, cast us not off for ever. Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and forgettest our affliction and oppression? For our soul is bowed down to the dust: our belly cleaveth unto the earth. Arise for our help, and redeem us for thy mercies' sake. Psalm xliv. 22,—26. Here we observe, that when Israel shall be bowed down to the dust, then will his salvation come; and that Israel is to suffer first, is also recorded: Tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the other nations. Rom. ii. 9. Let every one consider this, and they will find, that all those troubles that Israel has already gone through, the Gentiles will also have to pass through.

It is astonishing that they will not consider that their time is yet to come. Do they imagine that the Messiah will forgive them all the evil they have done from age to age to Israel? the blood of Israel, which was shed like water, cries, and will never be silent. And here their own apostle declares, that tribulation and anguish shall also come upon the Gentiles for doing evil, and which is also foretold by Moses: Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people: for he will avenge the blood of his servants, and will render vengeance to his adversaries, and will be merciful unto his land and to his people. Deut. xxxii. 43. The beginning of this verse should be remarked, Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people: it is not said, Rejoice, O all ye nations, but only nations; this is to shew, that only some particular nations are meant here, that is, only such nations as never troubled Israel; and each man or woman of the Gentiles that were kind to Israel in the time of their dispersion, all these shall rejoice with Israel, but no other.

12. Whoever shall be the Messiah, he will be no friend to the Gentiles; for so it is written: Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth shall set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord and against his anointed, &c. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron: thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Psalm ii. 1, 2, 8, 9. By this prophecy, we may learn, that when the Messiah shall come, all nations will fight against him, and that he will subdue all of them; and therefore he will be called the conqueror of the world. This is also confirmed by the gospel: That we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; that he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, &c. And on this account he hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David. Luke i. 71, 74, 69. From all these things it may be learned, that the Messiah is to come on account of Israel; to deliver them from the hand of their enemies, but to be of no benefit to the Gentiles: and this is also confirmed by the translators of the English Bible: see the title of Ezekiel xxxvi. The land of Israel is comforted by the heathens' destruction, and God's blessing of Israel.

13. QUESTION.—What shall the Messiah do for the Gentiles? Shall he gather them? they are not dispersed. Shall he give them kings? they have kings. Shall he give them lands? they have lands. Shall he give them nobles? they have nobles. Shall he give them riches? they have riches. Shall he give them glory? they have glory. But Israel has lost all these things, and therefore they have need of the Messiah.

The punishment of all those nations that shall meddle with Israel, foretold—By MOSES.—Happy art thou, O Israel: who is like unto thee, O people, saved by the Lord; the shield of thy help, and the sword of thy excellency? and thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee, and thou shalt tread upon their high places. Deut. xxxiii. 29.—By DAVID.—Pour out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee. For they have devoured Jacob, and laid waste his dwelling place. Psalm lxxix. 6.—The very same in Jeremiah x. 25.—By ISAIAH.—For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations. And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; and they shall be drunken with their own blood, as with sweet wine. Behold, all they that were incensed against thee shall be ashamed and confounded: they shall be as nothing; and they that strive with thee shall perish. Thou shalt seek them, and shalt not find them, even them that contended with thee: they that war against thee shall be as nothing. xxxiv. 2. xlix. 26. xli. 11, 12.—By JEREMIAH.—Israel is holy unto the Lord, and the first fruits of his increase: all that devour him shall offend; evil shall come upon them saith the Lord. Therefore all they that devour, they shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, every one of them, shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee, shall be a spoil, and all that prey upon thee will I give for a prey. Fear thou not, O Jacob, my servant, saith the Lord: for I am with thee; for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee: but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure; yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished. ii. 3. xxx. 16. xlvi. 28.—By JOEL.—For, behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land. iii. 1, 2.—By ZECHARIAH.—For he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye. Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of trembling unto all nations round about. ii. 8. xii. 2.—By MICAH.—Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thine hoofs brass: and thou shalt beat in pieces many nations. iv. 12. —By ZEPHANIAH.—Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey: for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy. iii. 8.—By EZEKIEL.—In the xxxii. chapter, from the 17 to the 32 verses, all nations are mentioned, and also the end of them. The prophet took notice, in the beginning of this chapter, of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and declared unto him that he should fall into the hands of Babylon. But in the 17 verse, he makes no more mention of Pharaoh, or of the king of Egypt, but, in ver. 18, says thus, Son of man, wait for the multitude of Egypt, &c. This prophecy should be understood well: in the first part he calls him Pharaoh, king of Egypt, for so he was in the time of Babylon. The second part will shew that there should come a time when the name of Pharaoh would be no more, and Egypt should become a province to some other power. In the end of this chapter, the prophet calls him again Pharaoh, but calls him no more a king. Here we observe, first, Pharaoh king of Egypt; secondly, the multitude of Egypt; thirdly, only Pharaoh. It is already mentioned, that in the last 16 verses, is determined the fate of all nations, which shall come to pass in the latter days: considering this event, the prophet calls upon Pharaoh, who was cotemporary with Nebuchadnezzar; saying, Pharaoh, arise from thy grave; thou thoughtest thy fall was great; be now comforted; see this day the fall of Egypt, and then wilt thou say, that thy trouble was nothing to be equalled with the present state of Egypt.

14. Just a little before the restoration of Israel, some of the European powers will declare war against Turkey; they will prosper, and take Constantinople; the Turks will fly to Egypt; the Europeans will follow them even into Egypt; there all the Turks will assemble to give battle; the contest will be dreadful, the Europeans will gain the victory; but those that will be slain on both sides will be innumerable. From thence the Europeans will march into the Holy Land, which they will also take without opposition. The great success of the Europeans in Africa and Asia, will make a great noise in all parts of Asia. The nations in the east of Asia, will assemble like one man, as well as the nations in the north; and both armies will appoint Gog to be the head and leader of them all. They will all be of the Mahometan religion, and one motive of their coming will be to relieve their brethren the Turks; the second motive, the fear of the European powers, lest they should subdue all Asia; their march is described in Ezekiel xxxviii. The march of Gog and his army will spread abroad, and the report of it will come to the ears of the Europeans. Of this march the prophet Daniel also took notice, as it is written: But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him; that is meant the head of the Europeans: therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many, that is, he shall go forth to fight Gog and his army. And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palaces between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him. Dan. xi. 44, 45. Further, we remark, that in the above sixteen verses it is mentioned, that some of those nations shall be circumcised, and some uncircumcised, and those nations of circumcision we know are all Mahometans. And this battle must be considered as the battle of the whole world, i. e. of the end of the four empires.

It is said by the prophet Zechariah, that Jerusalem shall be a cup of trembling to all nations; ch. xii. 2. which means this battle of Gog : and so in Zephaniah, that the Lord will gather all nations before Jerusalem, ch. iii. 8.

The same is described in Isaiah : Come near, ye nations, to hear ; and hearken, ye people : let the earth hear, and all that is therein ; the world, and all things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies : he hath utterly destroyed them, he hath delivered them to the slaughter, &c. xxxiv. 1, 2. And all these prophets meant the battle of Gog.

At that very time the ten tribes will be brought home by their leader, who will be called the Messiah, Son of Joseph, and this is foretold by the prophet Hosea : Then shall the children of Judah, and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head ; and they shall come up out of the land : for great shall be the day of Israel. ch. i. 11. The reason why Judah is mentioned among the ten tribes, is, that a great part of Judah went into captivity with them, as it is written : Senacherib, king of Assyria, came up against all the defenced cities of Judah, and took them. Isaiah xxvi. 1.

15. We read in Joshua—And it came to pass, as they fled from before Israel, and were in the going down to Bethhoron, that the Lord cast down great stones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died : there were more which died with hailstones, than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword. x. 11. The same, and a great deal more, will be seen relating to the battle of Gog : And I will call for a sword against him ; with pestilence and with blood ; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many nations that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone. Ezekiel xxxviii. 21, 22. This battle will be known throughout the world, for there will be seen wonders in heaven and on earth : And I will shew wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. Joel ii. 30. If all the matters mentioned from page 24 to this place were taken into consideration, it might be asked, where is the boasting of the Gentiles? For all these prophecies against all nations must come to pass; and if God is true, his word also must be true, and as he never changes, even so his word can never change. After that battle, immediately will commence the

16. RESTORATION of Judah and Benjamin from all the four quarters of the world. We have already given an account why Israel was scattered, and that the main object was, to establish the true worship among the Gentiles, that they should have no excuse in the day of judgment: but the prophet foretold that the Gentiles would pay no attention to what Israel should tell them, but all of them would remain as they had been before. For all nations will walk every one in the name of his God, and we will walk in the name of our God for ever and ever. Micah iv. 5. From this passage we may learn, that the different forms of worship used by the Gentiles are to be put away; and next we clearly see, that the only true worshippers in this world will be Israel; and observe the term, And we will walk in the name of our Lord God for ever and ever. He who will, may see that the worship of Israel is not to be put away, but to endure for ever and ever. The Gentiles know this passage; they can read it, they understand it, they know this is the word of God; and yet they will not believe it!

But let us see what another says: The Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely, our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit. Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods? Therefore, behold, I will this once cause them to know, I will cause them to know mine hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is The Lord. Jer. xvi. 19, 20, 21. From this prophecy, we learn that at last the Gentiles shall be forced to acknowledge their own guilt, and all of them will lay the charge to their forefathers; but that will be no excuse for them, for the words of the Lord are termed thus: Until now they would not know me, but now I shall cause them to know my hand and my might; hand and might, are well known to mean punishment; and then they shall know my name. Further, we observe, that the prophet doth not say that the Gentiles shall come, because they are called, but they shall come of their own accord; but we ask, What will be the cause of their coming? the answer follows.

17. A promise is given to Israel, that when they shall be restored, and their restoration known throughout the world; signs and wonders will be seen in heaven and earth, as it is written, According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt, will I shew unto him marvellous things. Micah vii. 15. In the time of Moses, there was no need to shew miracles, except in Egypt; because all Israel was there; but by the restoration, miracles will be shewn in the whole world. The beginning of it is foretold by Isaiah; All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth the trumpet, ye shall hear, xviii. 3. It is well known, when Israel was in Egypt, they could not be all in one place, but were scattered throughout the whole land; yet, by the coming out of Egypt, we find all Israel, men, women, and children, in Rameses, for so it is written, And the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses. Exodus xii. 37. It is also known, that Pharaoh would not let Israel depart until the last plague; but when the first-born began to die, Israel was driven out of the land; and all was done in one night, and the next morning we find all Israel in one place: but this was the hand of the Lord, who brought them all together at one time; and so it will be at the restoration, as it is written: If any of thine be driven out unto the outmost part of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee. Deut. xxx. 4. And how they will march is described by the prophet: Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows? Isaiah lx. 8.

When Israel came forth out of Egypt, they had no time to provide necessaries, because they were driven out; yet were they in want of nothing; for they had bread from heaven, flesh out of the air, and drink from the rock: even so it will be at the restoration. They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places. They shall not hunger nor thirst, neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them. I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the vallies: I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water. I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah tree, and the myrtle, and the oil tree; I will set in the desert the fir tree, and the pine, and the box tree together. Isaiah xlix. 9, 10. xli. 18, 19. In those days darkness will be over the whole world, but Israel shall have light, for it is written: For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the kingdoms: but the Lord shall shine upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. Isaiah lx. 2.

When Moses came down from mount Sinai, the glory of God shone upon his face, so that even Aaron, his own brother, was afraid to come near him, And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone; and they were afraid to come nigh him. Exodus xxxiv. 30. Even so it will be in the restoration; the glory of the Lord will shine upon the face of every true son of Abraham, in such a manner, that the Gentiles will be afraid to come near him, as mentioned above.

In those days also, great troubles will be in the whole world; and great pestilence, so that few people will remain; as it is written in Isaiah xxiv. And it shall come to pass that in the whole earth, saith the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off and die. Zech. xiii. 8. Next, the words of the prophet will be fulfilled: The breaker is come up before them, they have broken up and have passed through the gate, and their king (the Messiah,) shall pass before them, and the Lord on the head of them.* Micah ii. 13.

When the nations shall see the glory of Israel, that the Messiah walks on before them, and the glory of God on the head of them; then they will cry out, Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? Now we see, this is the people of God. And then will be fulfilled the prophecy; And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the nations: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed. Isaiah liii. 1. lxi. 9. At the same time, also, will be fulfilled the prophecy of Zechariah: Ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you. viii. 23. So it was in the time of Moses, that great numbers of Egyptians forsook their own land, and followed Israel. The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might: they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf; they shall lick the dust like a serpent; they shall move out of their holes like worms of the earth; they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall fear because of thee. Micah vii. 16, 17.

Those nations that shall be near the land of Israel, will pick up every Jew they shall be able to find; and bring

* The word Breaker is in the original Peretz, which was the name of the son of Judah, and here it means the Messiah; and the prophet calls him the Breaker, which this name signifies; and it is a proper name for the Messiah, for he will break down all the kingdoms of this world. King David also says the same. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron. Psalm ii. 9.

him for a present unto the Lord : Thus, saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the nations; and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders. And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, &c. Isaiah xl. 22. lxvi. 20. Those nations afar off shall bring them in ships, for so it is written : Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from afar, their silver and their gold with them, unto the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee. Isaiah vi. 9. In this manner will happen the salvation of Israel, and from thence Israel shall be saved for ever ; they shall no more be ashamed, as it is written : But Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation : ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end. Isaiah xlv. 17,

Next to this, all nations will come and acknowledge the Messiah to be their Lord and King, as it is written : And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the nations ; to him shall the Gentiles seek : and his rest shall be glorious. Isaiah xi. 10: And all those nations that shall remain in the world, from thence and further, shall be the servants of Israel, as it is written : Thus, saith the Lord, the Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One, to him whom man despiseth, to him whom the nations abhor, to a servant of rulers. Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the Lord that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose thee. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers : they shall bow down to thee with their faces towards the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet ; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord : for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me. Isaiah xlix. 7. 23. Also, any nation that shall say, I will not be subject to Israel, I will not be his servant, shall perish, as it is written: For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish: yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted. The sons also of these that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel. Isaiah lx. 12. 14.

The building of the Temple and City.—After this, the temple shall be rebuilt, as it is described in Ezekiel. Also Jerusalem shall be built, as it is written: Behold I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and thy foundation with sapphires; and I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. Isaiah liv. 11, 12. The Life of Israel will be as long as the days of Adam.—There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die an hundred years old: for as the days of the tree of life are the days of my people; and mine elect shall long enjoy the works of their hands. And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear. Isaiah lxxv. 20. 22. 24.

THE UNITY OF GOD ESTABLISHED.—This will be called the New World, or the world of the Messiah. At that time the Lord will be established throughout the whole world, and it will be known that he is the only God in heaven, above the heavens, in the earth, and beneath the earth; on the East, West, North, and South: and that will be the time when the Lord shall be king over the whole earth, but not until that time. In Exodus xv. we observe, Moses and all Israel sang one song when they passed through the Red Sea; and every one of Israel made use of every word, and one did not differ from the others even in one single word; and it is a part of the law, therefore it must be acknowledged that the Lord poured out his Holy Spirit upon every one in Israel. But we see one surprising thing in this song; The Lord shall reign for ever and ever. The question is here, Why did Moses say, The Lord shall reign? why not, The Lord reigned? whereby it would be understood that they praised the Lord, who was, and is, and shall be for evermore; but from the text we learn only that in a future time the Lord will be Lord, but not before he shall reign. One instance more we find: The Lord shall be king over all the earth. Zec. xiv. 9. By this passage we may learn that God shall be king in future, but not until then. Both of these quotations are the words of God, and therefore they must be true; and it must be considered that at the present time the Lord is not king over the whole earth: because he is not worshipped as the only God thro' heaven and earth, and the glory which is due to him alone, man has given to a bone, and to a stone; to the wind, the fire, the water, animals, the sun, the moon, and to dead men; every one of these is mentioned here as being worshipped as a god, and now is the same. We find it recorded that several men said, I am a god, but none of them died a good death. King Pharaoh was the first that said he was a god; his punishment was to be drowned in the Red Sea.—Joash, king of Judah, was the second that made himself a god; he also received his punishment, and he was slain upon his bed, and by his own servants.—Sennacherib was the third that made himself a god; he was slain by his own sons.—Hiram of Tyrus, was the fourth; he also was slain by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar.—Nebuchadnezzar was the fifth that made himself a god; he also received his punishment, for he was driven from men, to dwell with the beasts of the field; and this kind of punishment was worse than death itself: and in the same manner every man that said he was a god, never died a natural death; all these demigods were slain, but those punishments inflicted on them were only a punishment on their bodies ; but the punishment of their souls is laid up in store for the day of judgment ; for that will be the day for the end of all the false gods, and so they all will end with them together.

When Balaam the prophet saw that in future times men would say they were gods, he cried out ; God is not a man. Num. xxiii. 19. But if he still will say, Man is a god, tell him he is a liar. David also speaks against them, They that make them shall be like unto them ; so also shall be every one that trusteth in them. Psalm cxv. 8. They are vanity, and the work of errors ; in the time of their visitation they shall perish. Jer. x. 15. I, even I, am he that comforteth you ; who art thou that thou shouldest be afraid of man that shall die, and of the son of man that shall be made as grass ? Isa. li. 12. Cease ye from man, (that is, to say he is a god) whose breath is in his nostrils ; for wherein is he to be accounted of ? Isa. ii. 22 ; which is to say, that man is mortal. And the idols he shall utterly abolish. Isaiah xi. 8. And in that day will be fulfilled ; And the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day, ver. 17, which is to say, that at that time all the earth shall know, that there never was another god, but only the God of Israel. We also learn from the words of the apostle Paul, When all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all. Cor. xv. 28. The question here is, what does Paul mean by this sentence all in all ? why did he not explain it ? what can now be learned from it ? is it as much as to say, that only God, the God of Israel, will be then known, that he is the only God, and that is all in all ; and that all other gods will come to nothing, but God will remain for ever ? and this sense only can be the construction of it ; for he says, that Christ shall be subject, and shall deliver up the kingdom to God, and then God will be all in all : and indeed this is true, for he shall deliver up the kingdom to God, but that will not take place till the restoration of Israel. The last verse of the Song of Moses ought to strike the mind of every man; for we may ask the question, why this verse is not the first in the song, as indeed it ought to be; but we find it not so, for it is the last; The Lord shall reign for ever and ever: by this we may learn that it is the last, because it will take place in the last days

The Gentiles perhaps will say, We also believe that there is only one God, and yet there are three, as it is written: For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one. John v. 7. This is not true, and there is no truth in it, and this we shall prove as clear as possible.

First, these three ought to be equal in every degree, that is in power, glory, honour, wisdom, and life; but it is not so. The first is power; My Father is greater than I. John xiv. 28. The second glory; at last he shall have no kingdom and be subjected. Cor. xv. 28; in this passage may be included glory and honour. The third wisdom; But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father. Mark xii. 32. The fourth life; Christ lost his life, and shall be subjected in due time; but God is life everlasting, never to be subjected, but to be Lord over all that is in heaven and earth for evermore. Now these statements are a clear proof that these three are not one, because the one has the power, glory, honour, wisdom, life; but the other has nothing, and is to be nothing at last.

Next, we shall come to examine the difference between the Holy Ghost and Christ. Christ says, Whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. Matth. xii. 32, Mal. iii. 28,

Luke xii. 32. Mark iii. 28. Luke xii. 10. 1 John v. 16. Here also it may be seen, that the difference is uncommonly great; because, whatsoever you speak against Christ, it is forgiven, but if you speak against the Holy Ghost it is never to be forgiven. Secondly, Christ says, Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, Matt. xv. 11. Again, But rather give alms of such things as ye have; and behold all things are clean unto you. Luke xi. 41. But let us see what the Holy Ghost says: For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication; from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Acts xv. 28. These are commandments in opposition to that of Christ; and if one differs from the other, then they are divided amongst themselves, they certainly never can be called one. And again; Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God, whom God hath raised up. Acts ii. 22. You may learn from this passage that he was no more than a man; as the text says, a man approved of God.

Thus far we have proved, that these three cannot be one, because each differs from the other, and they are divided among themselves; and wherever there is a division there is no Unity; and if there is no Unity there can be no Trinity; and if there is no Trinity, then it must remain that there is but one living God and the rest is nothing. I will not lie, but will speak the truth, that I feel very much for the world at large; for the danger is tremendous, to take the glory due to God alone, and give it to a mortal man. Observe what Moses says; See now that I, even I, am he, and there is no God with me; I kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal; neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. Deut. xxxii. 39. It ought to be known, that, according to the original, this verse is translated improperly; and here I shall give the proper sense of it.

See now that I, even I, am he, and is no God with me ; I shall cause them to die, that shall say, that there is another God. Observe the term—I shall cause them to die. We all know, every man that is born of a woman must die, therefore here it must be understood—I shall cause them to die a second death, and that will be in the day of judgment.

O how wonderful it is, that a great world of people should not see and understand, that the one is called the Father and the other Son : and who knows not that a father is always above the son ; and if so, what connection has the one with the other ? A man is called mortal, but why is he called so ? the reason is, because he is born to die. The very thing should be considered in the present case ; Christ stands to be subjected, and he that stands to be subjected, is subjected already. And last of all, it ought to be remarked, that the very names will shew that there is no connection between them. A Father is one thing, a Son is another thing, and a Holy Ghost is also another thing ; three names must be three distinct persons, and how can they be one ? Yet after all, it is not surprising ; because it was told before hand by all the prophets, that so it would be, and so it would continue until the day of the Lord ; and then he would say to the Gentiles, See now that I am the only God, and there is no other God with me. And at that time will be fulfilled the words of the prophet ; And the Lord shall be king over all the earth, in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one. Zech. xiv. 9. From this we learn, that until the day of the Lord, his kingdom is considered as if he had not the dominion over the kingdom of this world, neither will his name be one, but more than one ; but when the day of the Lord shall come, then will he make it known, that he is the only king over all the earth, and at the same time will he also cause the Gentiles to know that his name is not three, but ONE.

AN ANSWER
TO THE
RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

BY THOMAS SCOTT,
RECTOR OF ASTON SANDFORD, BUCKS.

To the Law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. Isaiah viii. 20.

Search the scriptures: for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me. John v. 39.

The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy. Rev. xix. 10.

ANSWER
TO THE
DECLARATION.

Page iii. line. 1. ‘If ever, &c.’ Whatever the author’s design in writing might be, the book came into my hands, under circumstances, which induced me to conclude, that he expected it would be answered, and consequently published. It appeared to challenge an answer; and if none had been returned, the occasion of triumphing would have been given.

P. iii. l. 7. ‘That the author is an enemy to Christians, &c.’ There is no reason to suppose that Mr. Crooll is an enemy to Christians; but he is an avowed opponent of Christianity.—The writer of this answer is far indeed from an enemy to Jews; but he opposes Judaism, as far as that opposes Christianity, and no further.

P. iii. l. 10. ‘It is well known, &c.’ This part of the declaration, being coincident with several things, in the body of the work, will be considered in its proper place.

P. iv. l. 4. ‘How much more, &c.’ This passage gives me sincere pleasure; and I think it does credit to the writer.—As a Briton, I feel a satisfaction at the acknowledgment from a Jew, that he and his brethren are treated better here than in any other country. It honours our national character: but that character, as far as it is truly honourable, is the result of clearer and fuller views of Christian principles, than most other nations possess; and I still more rejoice in the testimony, as honourable to Christianity, which is far dearer to me, than even my beloved country.

P. iv. l. 10. ‘But the real cause, &c.’ As far as the tract here referred to is concerned, it is not requisite to make any remarks. I will, however, fairly acknowledge, that after all which has hitherto been published, a Jew may have much to say for himself, and with considerable plausibility. Though I am far from allowing, that either the Committee of the London Society, or Christians in general, have ‘answered nothing:’ I must own, that very much remains to be done; and that the controversy, between Jews and Christians, has not hitherto been fairly brought before the publick. Detached parts have been ably discussed; but the whole of Judaism, as opposing Christianity, has not been fully and comprehensively investigated. This conviction has increased in my mind, during the whole progress of the present work.

Not that I hope, to produce such a full and comprehensive investigation of the subject: I only say, that after a long course of years, spent in studying the holy Scriptures; I may, probably, be able to bring forth some materials, which have not yet been fully explored; and of which hereafter more skilful workmen may perhaps avail themselves. In this, I am rather the more sanguine; as the investigation of the several topicks, brought before me, has imparted much light to my own mind, on many parts of the Old Testament, beyond what I had before attained.

P. iv. l. 32. ‘As soon as a Jew, &c.’ I consider a Jew, as an avowed opponent of Christianity; I do not expect him to speak with that reverence of my glorious and gracious Saviour, which I approve: and whatever I may think, or feel, I had rather shew by sound argument, that what he advances is erroneous, than meet it with hard words.

P. iv. l. 38. ‘If the Committee, &c.’ This shews the author expected, that his thoughts would be published with an answer, by the Committee of the London Society. — God grant, that the answer ‘may be for good to all parties.’

ANSWER
TO THE
RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

THE title of the book, which I am attempting to answer, seems to throw an impediment in my way: for I as firmly believe ‘the Restoration of Israel,’ as Mr. Crooll does; and not in a sense so entirely different from his own, as he may probably suppose. This, however, will appear in the sequel throughout. In the mean while, it is enough to observe, that the question to be examined is this:—WHETHER THE MESSIAH PREDICTED IN THE OLD TESTAMENT BE ALREADY COME OR NOT? For, if he is, without doubt Jesus the Son of Mary is He. We therefore, with little variation, ask the question proposed by John Baptist, “Art thou he who cometh?” (ὁ ἐρχόμενος;) “or do we look for another?”*

The motto, from the New Testament; “Prove all things: hold fast that which is good,†” I most cordially adopt: and, earnestly praying for teaching and assistance to God who “giveth wisdom,”‡ I would proceed, with all seriousness, candour, and impartiality, to bring the infinitely important question to the touchstone of the holy Scriptures.

As, however, my controversy is with one, who, while he often quotes the New Testament, does not allow it to be a part of “the oracles of God;” I shall forego all appeal to it, as authority; and argue from the Old Testament exclusively; where the subject in debate does not expressly relate to the New Testament.

* Matt. xi. 3.

† Thes. v. 21.

‡ Prov. ii. 1—6.

P. 5. l. 1. MESSIAH.—‘This name, &c.’ If the name MESSIAH be applicable to a high priest; then, doubtless, THE MESSIAH was predicted as a High Priest: yet Mr. C. never once adverts to this, or proposes the question—‘Was the predicted Messiah to be a High Priest, or not?’ The high priests of Israel were frequently rulers, yet not always: but they were always anointed, Messiahs. It can hardly be said, that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were rulers, except over their own families; yet it is said concerning them, even to kings, “Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.”* It may be noted, that the word Messiah, or anointed, does not occur in any of the three texts, adduced in proof, that the title of Messiah ‘is always given either to a king, to a ruler, or to a judge.’ This inaccuracy, however, does not in the least affect the main argument.

All the kings of Judah, and some of the kings of Israel, might properly be called “The LORD’s anointed:” and Cyrus, who was selected to perform special services in favour of the Jews, is thus distinguished: but the title is given to no other king, or ruler, over a heathen nation, in the whole scripture. The reason of this is clear. The kings of Judah and Israel, and Cyrus, the friend of Israel, were, in different ways, types of him, who is emphatically THE MESSIAH, THE CHRIST, the ANOINTED; the Prophet, High Priest, and King of Israel: but no other kings were.

The king of Tyre is indeed called “the anointed Cherub,”† but the Hebrew word is not משיח, but ממשח; and the expression is used, not to honour him, but to expose his extreme arrogance.

P. 5. l. 15. HE IS TO BE ONLY A MAN. The texts adduced do not appear, in any degree, to prove the proposition, after which they are placed. "David, Israel's king," doubtless meaning the Messiah, was predicted as a Man; but that does not prove, that he would be 'only a Man.'—As this, however, is asserted still more strongly, on the next page; the answer will be there given to it.

* Ps. cv. 15.

† Ezek. xxviii. 14.

P. 5. l. 22. HE MUST HAVE BOTH FATHER AND MOTHER. — 'It is acknowledged, &c.' The words in Italicks, 'but not by the house of their mothers,' (p. 6. l. 10.) are here inserted, as if a part of the text quoted; but they are the writer's gloss, or addition. The reader should well note this, for such additions occur in several places, and are suited to mislead the incautious.

It is readily conceded, that the genealogy of an Israelite, as far as it related to the allotment of his inheritance in the promised land, 'depended on his father only.' The daughters of Zelophehad, however, and other heiresses, succeeded to estates, in their own right: though not allowed to marry out of their own tribe.* When, therefore, the genealogy was made of any family in Israel, till it came to a man, who left no son, but a daughter, an heiress; who married to one of her own tribe; it may be asked, Whose name was inserted in the genealogy, after that of her father? If the heiress's name were inadmissible, must not her husband's be substituted, as the son of her father; in something of the same manner as Joseph's name is substituted for Mary's, as the son of Heli?† Again, Would it have been impossible, 'because the pedigree depended on his father only,' to prove a son of one of Zelophehad's daughters, to be a descendant of Zelophehad? He would not be, on his father's side, a son of Zelophehad; but on his mother's only: yet, it is evident, that as the son of Zelophehad, he must be entitled to the portion of his inheritance. Now, in the same manner, as the son of Zelophehad's daughter might be proved the son of Zelophehad, Jesus may be proved to be the Son of David. He was proved to be the Son of Heli, as born of his daughter Mary; and Heli was proved to be the descendant of David.

* Num. xxvii. 7—11.

† Luke iii. 23.

The title to the priesthood was certainly confined entirely to the male line: and if all the male descendants of Aaron had failed, no female could have inherited the priesthood, for herself, or for her son by whatever father. This event, which was not impossible, nor, after the death of Nadab and Abihu, very improbable; not being provided against, in the law of Moses; when the whole of his instituted worship must finally terminate, in case of such a failure; is a most convincing proof, that he did not enact his laws, by any human policy, but according to the express appointment of God. There is, however, no need to prove our Lord's descent from David in this way. He is a Priest indeed, but "after the order of Melchisedek!" Nor is it required, that he should be proved the heir of David's kingdom, by the right of primogeniture: for he receives his kingdom, as David and Solomon did, by the express nomination and appointment of God. It suffices, if his descent from David can be proved, in the way that Abraham's descent from Adam is; (before either the law of Moses, or the customs, and genealogies of Israel, were introduced:) and this may be done, according to those rules, which are adopted in other nations; though the peculiar situation of Israel, especially as to inheritances, and the priesthood, rendered more exact regulations needful in their case. The genealogy of Heli, the father of Mary, is traced back from the son to the father, without the least intimation of any interruption, or intermarriage with other families, or branches of David's family, in the male line only, through Nathan to David, and so to Abraham and Adam.* But, as it was not customary, to insert the name of a woman as a link in such a chain; the name of Joseph, her husband, is inserted, who was, by marriage “the son of Heli.” As, however, Joseph was supposed to be the father of Jesus:* Matthew gives the genealogy of Joseph also, in the line of Solomon to David.†

* Luke iii. 23—38.

I am fully aware, that many Christian expositors have laboured, and still do labour, with much learning and ingenuity, to prove both the genealogies to belong to Joseph. But Joseph could not be actually begotten both by Jacob and by Heli.‡ He could not be descended, by the father’s side, from both Solomon and Nathan: intermarriages, as may be learned from Mr. C.’s statement, are wholly inadmissible in such genealogies; ‘the pedigree depends on the father only;’ except in such a case as that of Zelophehad’s daughters; or that of Mary the mother of Jesus. Their labour must therefore be in vain: and far worse than in vain; as perplexing a simple subject of considerable importance, though not of so high importance as the Jews imagine. For the modern Jews evidently suppose, that no genealogy of Jesus, however exact and satisfactory, can prove Jesus to be ‘the Son of David,’ on the supposition that he had no human father: and they think this imagined impossibility demonstration against his being the promised Messiah. If it can be proved, with whatever cogency, that he was the Son of Mary, and that Mary was the descendant of David; this does not, in the view of some among them, at least, at all help the argument. Indeed their reasoning is not very perspicuous: but, as far as I can understand, it amounts to this:—A man is indeed the son of his mother; but he is the seed of his father only; because the seed is of the male, and the female is the ground on which it grows. If this be not their meaning, I am open to correction, and shall be glad to be set right.

* Luke iii. 23. The clause, “as it is supposed,” seems to stand a good deal in the way of the Jews, in this argument; so that one of the body conjectures, without any proof, that the words were interpolated.

† Matt. i. 1—17.

‡ Matt. i. 16. Luke iii. 23.

I allow, that the word seed, in this sense, is generally and almost always thus used in the Old Testament; in fact, I do not recollect more than one clear exception to the rule. But that exception is a very important and interesting one. It occurs in the first prediction of the Messiah: "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed."* Here, at least, is an instance of one being called "the seed of a woman;" and in the very person, who, as the Son of Mary, is the Seed of David." This coincidence is very remarkable.

Will, however, any man venture to say that Almighty God cannot make a virgin, continuing such, the mother of a son; who would be wholly her seed, as far as the human species is concerned? Now, Christians are convinced, that for reasons of infinite importance, God did once "create a new thing in the earth,"† and omnipotently effect this unprecedented work. And we ask: Supposing this "holy Child" should be born of a virgin descended from David; and that it was the will of JEHOVAH, that her child should be known as the descendant of David; would it be impossible for the Almighty God to prove his descent from David? To prove it in the same way, as his descent from Adam and Eve might be proved?

The objection, if it prove any thing, must prove, that this would have been impossible to God himself: yet few would venture to maintain this, in so many words.

It must, I think, be clear, that God has condescended to shew the descent of Jesus Christ from David, with sufficient evidence. It should, however, be observed, that the proof, of Jesus being the Son of David, by no means rests on the genealogies alone. These were, probably, taken by the evangelists from the registers of the Jews, as they found them; according to the custom of the times, without any alteration; and they were only answerable for the faithfulness of the transcript.

* Gen. iii. 15.

† Jer xxxi. 22.

which has never been impeached. But numbers, during our Lord's personal ministry, comparing his character, miracles, and doctrine, with the ancient prophecies of a Messiah, without any previous knowledge of his genealogy, confessed him to be the "Son of David."* Every proof of his resurrection proclaims him as "the Son of David," independently of all genealogies. Hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, had owned him as "the Son of David," before either of the genealogies was published. It is evident, that neither the apostles, nor the other writers of the New Testament, rest the argument, in any degree, upon the genealogies. They are not once referred to, in any part of the sacred volume: but the proof, that Jesus is the Son of David, is rested on the prophecies fulfilled in him, and on his miracles; but especially on his resurrection.† Neither did any opponent in the primitive times of Christianity, stand forth, and demand a genealogy, in proof of this; as it is now done, when all the genealogies are lost!

Should the Jews still think, that our proof of this point, from the genealogies, is attended with difficulty: I would, in return, enquire of them, How they intend to prove the Messiah, whom they expect, to be "the Son of David," now that they have no genealogies to appeal to? If they answer, By miracle, or by immediate testimony from God, without genealogy: then, I maintain, that it is impossible they should ever have more abundant proof of this kind; than we already have, that Jesus is "the Son of David."

To assert, that all this is nothing, if he had not a human father, is to assume, without proof, the grand point in contest between Jews and Christians: but this must be determined in another manner, even by "the sure testimony of God."

P. 6. l. 16. 'A SAVIOUR—Is not the name, &c.' It is allowed that the text referred to, in Zechariah, does not prove, that the

* Matt. ix. 27. xii. 23. xx. 30, 31. xxi. 9, 15. Luke xxiii. 38, 39.

† Acts ii. 29—33. xiii. 32, 33. Rom. i. 3, 4. 2 Tim. ii. 8.

Messiah is called a Saviour: for the original word signifies Saved: being the participle Niphal, or passive. Christian interpreters, however, did not introduce the interpretation of our version; they only borrow it from the Septuagint, which renders the word $\sigma\omega\zeta\omega\nu$, Saving, (active;) and some learned men contend, that the original may admit of that rendering: but I would rest nothing on such insecure ground. The prophecy, however, as acknowledged by a Jew to relate to the Messiah, is of considerable importance in the argument. “ Rejoice “ greatly, O daughter of Zion; Shout, O daughter of Jerusa“ lem: behold thy King cometh unto thee, he is just, and “ saved; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the “ foal of an ass. And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim,
 “ and the horse from Jerusalem; and the battle-bow shall be “ cut off; and he shall speak peace unto the heathen; and “ his dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river, “ even to the ends of the earth. As for thee also, by the “ blood of thy covenant, I have sent forth thy prisoners out “ of the pit, wherein is no water.”*

This is a very different view of the Messiah, of his victories and triumphs, of “ the weapons of his warfare,” and the effect of them on the heathen, than that exhibited in the subsequent pages of Mr. C.’s book. I intreat the reader carefully to examine the several clauses of this remarkable prophecy, and to bear them in mind, as we proceed. There are three words in the original, each decidedly meaning an ass: an ass, a she ass; the colt of an ass. But the Septuagint seems ashamed of this humiliating circumstance, and uses more general terms; ($\upsilon\pi\omicron\zeta\upsilon\gamma\iota\omicron\nu$, και $\pi\upsilon\lambda\lambda\omicron\nu$ νεον. A beast of burden, even a young colt). — We know that this part of the prophecy was most exactly and literally fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, when meek and lowly, as Zion’s king, he entered Jerusalem on the colt of an ass, amidst the acclamations of the multitudes, “ crying, Ho-

* Zech. ix. 9—11.

“sanna to the Son of David:”—“Blessed be the kingdom of our father David that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest.”* But let the reader determine, whether it be at all probable, that such a Messiah as the Jews expect, will enter Jerusalem in this lowly manner, when saved and made triumphant over all his opponents. The scripture, however, cannot be broken: and, if Jesus be not the Messiah; the Messiah, when he comes, will certainly, in the literal sense, thus enter Jerusalem, as Zion’s King.

I shall not enlarge on the other clauses of the prophecy. In whatever way, we interpret the prediction, “I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle-bow shall be cut off;” it cannot accord with victories obtained by the Jews in sanguinary contests, and with the slaughter of numerous enemies, in the usual way of war and triumph: for the establishment of Messiah’s kingdom, at his coming, (and not ‘the restoration of Israel,’) is predicted, when by his apostles, “the weapons of whose warfare were not carnal, but mighty through God,” “he spake peace to the heathen,” and formed a most extensive kingdom over willing subjects in the gentile world. “The blood of thy covenant,” should also be noted: but I forbear to enlarge, as the prophecy must be considered in another connection.

Many other scriptures which Christians adduce, concerning the Messiah as a Saviour, being warranted in so doing, by the inspired writers of the New Testament, must not be used in this argument with Jews: especially as most of them at present, I suppose, consider him as a mere ‘man, like other men.’ It is not, however, correct, that because God is a Saviour; nay, because he says, “Besides me there is no Saviour;” to conclude that none else can in any sense be called a Saviour. A Saviour is a Deliverer, from evil, temporal or eternal; from enemies, wordly or spiritual; from dangers of whatever kind. מושיע

* Matt. xxi. 4—11. Mark xi. 6—11. Luke xix. 35—38. John xii. 12—16.

the participle Hiphel of יִשְׁׁלֵם is often used in this sense, and it signifies, one causing salvation. It is used of JEHOVAH, in the texts referred to below :* and of men in many other places.† Not only the great Agent is a Saviour, but his instruments also have the same title.

The prophet introduces, in a most sublime manner, One who says, “ I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save.”—“ Mine own arm brought salvation unto me.”‡ If this be a prophecy of the Messiah, he speaks as a Saviour, and as saving by his own power : if it be not, who, or what, is predicted?

The language of the the Lord by Hosea is also remarkable. “ I will have mercy on the house of Judah, and will save them by the LORD their God ; and I will not save them by the sword, &c.”||

The Messiah is, beyond dispute, called “ a Redeemer ;” an appellation, at least equally appropriate to JEHOVAH. This Mr. C. confesses, and in a manner, which in fact concedes the point in contest. “ This is my covenant.” “ What is that covenant ? To send them a Deliverer ; for what ? “ To take away their sins.” (P. 11.)—Now a deliverer, to take away ‘ their sins,’ is One who “ shall save his people from their sins.”§ The Messiah is also, in several places predicted, as “ the Salvation of God.”¶ And no doubt Simeon gave the true meaning of these prophecies, when he said, “ Mine eyes have seen thy Salvation ; a Light to lighten the gentiles, and to be the Glory of thy people Israel.”

But it is needless to insist further on this. If the Messiah was not predicted as a Saviour, or Deliverer, in one sense or another ; what was to be the object of his coming ?—It is manifest, that the Jews expect a Deliverer from temporal evils, and worldly

* Is. xliii. 11. xlv. 15. 21. lxiii. 8. Hos. xiii. 4. Zech. viii. 7. Heb.

† Deut. xxii. 27. xxviii. 29. Judg. iii. 9. 15. 1 Sam. xi. 3. 2 Kings xiii. 5. Neh. ix. 27. Is. xix. 20. Heb.

‡ Is. lxiii. 1—6. || Comp. Hos. i. 7. Tit. ii. 10—13. iii. 4—6.

§ Is. lix. 20. Matt. i. 21. Rom. xi. 26. ¶ Is. xii. 2. xlix. 6. lii. 10.

enemies: Christians rejoice in a Saviour from sin and Satan, from wrath and hell, “salvation with eternal glory:” They look to Immanuel, as “become the Author of eternal salvation “to all who obey him.”—In this view of the subject, they are so familiar with the term Saviour, as used of the Messiah, and so in the habit of using the language of the Old Testament, in expressing their thoughts and feelings respecting Him: that they cannot but be surprised to hear it so much as questioned, Whether the Messiah should be a Saviour or not.*

P. 6. l. 28 THE SON OF MAN.—‘Ezekiel &c.’ It is rather wonderful the writer should assert, that ‘Jesus never thought ‘of such a thing,’ as being called God, or any thing more than “the Son of Man.” Had the Jews, in our Lord’s days, thought so; they must either have given up their prosecution of him; or conducted it on other grounds. “Therefore the Jews sought “the more to kill him, because he had not only broken the “sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making “himself equal with God.”* The Jews answered him; for a “good work we stone thee not, but for blasphemy; because “thou being a man makest thyself God.”† “We have a “law, and by our law he ought to die because he made “himself the Son of God.”‡ It would be quite superfluous to quote any texts in proof, that he called himself the Son of God, in the highest and most appropriate sense.||

Mr. C. asserts, that ‘if Jesus is Man he is no God.’ This Socinians have often done: but assertion is not proof. “To us “a Son is given, and his name shall be called “Wonderful, “Counsellor, the MIGHTY GOD.”§ “Without controversy, “Great is the mystery of Godliness, God was manifest in the “flesh.”¶ Certainly Man is not God, nor God, man: but the general tradition and opinion of nearly all nations, concerning incarnations of the Deity, are in diametrical opposition to these

* John. v. 17, 18.

† John x. 30—33.

‡ John. xix. 7.

Matt. xxvi. 63. Luke xxii. 70.

|| John. iii. 15, 16. v. 25, 26. ix. 35.

x. 29, 30. 36.

§ Is. ix. 6

¶ 1 Tim. iii. 16.

confident assertions. This at least implies a general persuasion, that such an event is not a natural impossibility. Whether the Old Testament taught Israel to expect this mysterious event, must be tried by appropriate evidence.

The term, "son of man," as used concerning Ezekiel, simply means "a son of Adam (בן אדם.) And, as adopted by Jesus Christ, it signifies nearly the same; he was born of the stock of Adam: but it does not at all relate to the manner of his conception.—Mr. C. has been peculiarly unhappy, in his quotation from the book of Daniel: for he adduces, not the words of the prophet, or of God by him; but the opinion of Nebuchadnezzar's baffled magicians; which opinion God was pleased to refute, by revealing the secret to his servant Daniel.* The texts referred to, at the bottom of the page, may give some light on the question, Whether the dwelling of God be ever with man, or not.†

Having disposed of these assertions, or arguments, and this quotation; I proceed once for all, to collect from the passages quoted, a question, which I shall attempt to answer.

WAS THE MESSIAH, PREDICTED IN THE OLD TESTAMENT, TO HAVE A MAN AS HIS IMMEDIATE FATHER?

If the Messiah was to be the Son of a man and a woman, in the ordinary course of human nature, it could not reasonably be supposed, that any notice of so common an event would be taken by the prophets. But if he was to be an exception to all rules and examples, from the creation to the end of the world; it must be supposed, that some intimation, at least, if not clear prediction, would be given of it. If then Christians could produce nothing of this kind from the Old Testament, it would weaken very much their proof of the miraculous conception of Jesus; and even their evidence of another kind, that he is the predicted Messiah. But if matters are in this respect so arranged, as it might reasonably have been expected beforehand: it must powerfully combine with all their other arguments to establish their doctrine.

* Dan. ii. 11. 16—23.

† Ex. xxix. 45. Lev. xxvi. 11. 12.

Num. xxxv. 34. Ps. lxxviii. 16—18. cxxxii. 14. Is. lviii. 15.

The well-known prophecy of Isaiah first calls for our most serious attention.* Let the introduction be carefully and impartially considered. "The LORD spake unto Ahaz, saying, "Ask thee a sign of the LORD thy God; ask it either in the depth, or in the height above."—Either "a sign from heaven," or, one like the dividing of the sea. Beyond doubt, a miraculous sign, of the most stupendous nature, vastly deviating from the ordinary course of human affairs, was intended.—But when Ahaz perversely refused to ask a sign, God answered, "The LORD himself shall give you a sign: Behold, "a virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and shall call his name Immanuel." The introduction, and the call for attention, must lead every attentive and impartial reader to expect, that some manifest interposition of Omnipotence was about to be promised: but there would be nothing miraculous, or uncommon, in a virgin marrying and bearing a son; nor even in the name Immanuel, except as understood in the sense of the New Testament: nor have they, who adopt this interpretation, been able to ascertain, who this virgin was, and who the son born of her, or why called Immanuel. Hezekiah, to whom some would apply it, had been born long before: for he was twenty-five years of age at his father's death, and his father reigned only sixteen years.

The words, however, will not bear this sense: and we appeal, not to Rabbinical Hebrew, or to the Rabbinical traditions and interpretations, but to the Hebrew Bible. Now the original word (עַלְמָה) in the Hebrew Bible, uniformly means, 'a woman, who has not known man, by lying with him. It is derived from עָלַם, to be hid, or, concealed: Hence עֶלְמָם, puer qui adhuc gnarus non est concubitus matrimoni-

* Isa. vii. 10—14.
2 Kings xx. 9. Heb.

† תַּמָּה Ex. iv. 9. viii. 23. Num. xvi. 38.

‘alis : occultatus a re conjugali.’ (Robertson.) And עֲלָמָה, ‘adolescentula puella, sed virgo, sic appellata, quod esset occultata viro.’ (Buxtorf.)

“The virgin was very fair to look upon, and a virgin, “(בְּתוּלָה) neither had any man known her.”* The same ideas are afterwards expressed in one word, (עֲלָמָה).† The word is also used concerning Miriam, when the history evidently supposes she was about twelve or thirteen years old, living in her father’s house.‡

The word occurs also in Proverbs. “There are three things “which are too wonderful for me; yea, four which I know “not: the way of an eagle in the air; the way of a serpent “upon a rock; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea; “and the way of a man with a maid.”|| ‘Promptissimum est intelligere vincula, quibus virgo incipit astringi futuro sponso suo; quæ a castis et pudicis virginibus teguntur.’ ‘It is ‘most obvious to understand it of those ties, by which a ‘virgin begins to be bound to her own future husband; which ‘by chaste and modest virgins are covered.’ The clause may, however, mean the various arts of insinuation, by which men win the affections of young women, while yet virgins; and at length obtain their consent either to honourable marriage, or dishonourable intercourse. The previous virgin purity of the persons concerned is evidently supposed: and the case of the adulterous woman, mentioned in the next verse, is totally distinct from it.

The plural of this noun occurs in the sixty-eighth Psalm, and is translated “damsels;”§ where the obvious meaning is clearly coincident. It is also found in Canticles; and in one place as expressly distinguished from “queens and concubines,”¶ and it occurs no where else in the Hebrew Bible. But בְּתוּלָה is of more frequent occurrence.

* Gen. xxiv. 16. Heb

‡ Prov. xxx. 18—20

† Gen. xxiv. 43. Heb.

§ Ps. lxxviii. 25.

‡ Ex. ii. 8.

¶ Cant. i. 3. vi. 8.

According to this constant use of the word, it is, in the passage under consideration, expressly predicted, that a “ virgin, ’ one who has not known man by lying with him,’ “ shall “ conceive and bear a son, and call his name Immanuel:” and it is predicted as a SIGN, a most extraordinary fact, a most signal interposition of Omnipotence.

If the Jews will not admit the Evangelist’s interpretation of this prophecy;* let them shew, distinctly and without any interpolation, when and in whom it has been fulfilled, or will be fulfilled. Till this be done, in a manner satisfactory to the understandings of learned men, of whatever creed; we have a right to conclude, that this foretels the most wonderful event yet known on earth: the conception and birth of a Man ‘ without a human father;’ and justly entitled to “ the name IMMANUEL, GOD WITH US.” For “ his name “ shall be called WONDERFUL, Counsellor, the mighty GOD.”† With such a clear and decisive prediction, other prophecies may fairly be considered as pre-intimations of this stupendous and infinitely important event.—On what account was the Messiah first promised and predicted, as “ the Seed of the “ woman?”‡ Till his immediate parent, the Lord Jesus, in whom we Christians confide, was the Seed of the man, at least equally as the Seed of the woman: but not having man, as his immediate father, he had been from the beginning emphatically foretold, as “ The Seed of the woman.”—“ There- fore, that holy thing, which shall be born of thee, shall be “ called the Son of God.”|| But how can this title belong to one born in the ordinary course of things, as other men are?

Thus, the opinion of the Jews, grounded almost uniformly on the language of scripture, that a man is indeed the son of his mother, but the seed of his father, combines in fixing the christian interpretation of the original promise of a Mes-

* Matt. i. 21—23.

† Is. ix. 5, 6.

‡ Gen iii. 15.

|| Luke i. 34, 35.

siah: and, that it should be almost, if not altogether, a solitary exception to the rule, must be allowed a very singular coincidence with the language of Isaiah.

It is also said by Jeremiah, in a prophecy of multiplied blessings to Israel, "The LORD hath created a new thing in the earth; a woman shall compass a man."*—Now, for a woman to conceive a son, by an immediate act of almighty power, without any human father, and so "compass" and carry him in her womb, and in due time give him birth; was indeed "a new thing," never before heard of: to effect this, was, strictly speaking, "to create a new thing:" and this "new thing" was most intimately and inseparably connected with the great and gracious events predicted throughout the chapter.—'It is a new thing and unheard of, that a woman should court a man:—so the Jewish nation shall return to God their Husband. So most of the modern Jews understand the words.' (Lowth.) But is it indeed "a NEW THING in the earth," and a work of creating power; for a woman to return of her own accord, if allowed, to her husband, whom she had forsaken?† Or even for a woman to court a man, who is not her husband? Witness Potiphar's wife; she compassed Joseph sufficiently in this sense.‡ Not to insist on the case of Ruth.§—'A woman, the most feeble & despicable persons, compared elsewhere to women, shall discomfit a mighty warrior.' (Lowth.) But is this so wonderful a work of creating power? "So new a thing on earth?"|| It is indeed so far from "a new thing," that it has been done and is continually done all over the world. These are the two most plausible interpretations of the text, advanced by those who reject that above adduced: and they certainly are in all respects unsatisfactory.

Nothing has yet occurred, which forms even a plausible

* Jer. xxxi. 22.

† Hos. ii. 17.

|| Judg. iv. 9. 21—22.

‡ Gen. xxxix. 7—12.

§ Ruth iii.

accomplishment of this prediction; except the conception and birth of Jesus, by the virgin Mary. If there has been any such fulfilment, let it be produced.

Here then, we have as clear a prediction, and as much pre-intimation, as the case required; or as the general obscurity of unfulfilled prophecy allows. And on this ground we answer, without hesitation, that the Messiah, according to the Old Testament, was not to have a human father; but to be the immediate son of a woman, and not of a man. “A female shall encompass a male.”

But another question arises out of the same paragraph.—WAS THE MESSIAH PREDICTED AS A MERE MAN, THE NATURE OF HIS PERSON BEING FORMED ONLY LIKE THAT OF ANOTHER MAN?

In order to shew from the Old Testament alone, that the Messiah is predicted as more than mere man, ‘the nature of his person formed only like that of another man;’ I shall first call the reader’s attention to the words of the prophet Micah: “But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah; yet out of thee shall he come forth to me, that is to be Ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting.”

As this is the prediction selected by the scribes and Pharisees, in answer to the question of king Herod, where the Messiah should be born; it will be allowed to belong to the Messiah. The variation of the Septuagint from the Hebrew; and that of the evangelist, as quoting it, do not affect the sense; and in this argument are wholly foreign to our purpose. We take the text as it stands in Micah.—“The goings forth of him,” (who should be born at Bethlehem, to rule over and feed Israel) would be “from of old, from everlasting.”—מִמֵּי עוֹלָם Καὶ ἐξοδοὶ αὐτοῦ ἀπ’ ἀρχῆς, ἐξ ἡμερῶν αἰῶνος: “And his goings forth from the beginning, from the days of eternity." (Sept.) Thus these ancient Jewish interpreters translate the clause.—“In the beginning was the “Word:” “and the Word was God: the same was in the “beginning with God:”—“And the Word became flesh, and “dwelt among us.”* Is there nothing in the prophecy of Micah, similar to this declaration of the Evangelist? Nothing at all different from what is spoken concerning the birth of other men? ‘The words do naturally import an original, distinct from the birth of Christ, mentioned in the foregoing ‘sentence, which is here declared to be from all eternity.’ (Lowth.) “Art thou not from everlasting, JEHOVAH?” (מִקְדָּם) Here this word is used concerning the eternity a parte ante, of the everlasting, self-existent God. מִקְדָּם with this preposition, when duration is intended, always refers to past duration. The learned reader may consult the texts referred to;† which are, I believe, nearly all the places, in which it is used in this sense.—Antiquitas: eternitas si de Deo dicatur. (Robertson.) Past existence, without any intimation of a beginning, is therefore intended.—It follows מִיְמֵי עוֹלָם “from the days of eternity.”—Here also the preposition necessarily refers to what was past; and the words always imply past duration, either limited by the context, or wholly unlimited.‡ לְעוֹלָם וָעוֹלָם אַתָּה אֱלֹהִים “From everlasting to everlasting thou art God.”|| When thus used concerning past duration, it seems always to mean a duration, the beginning of which is hidden; according to the meaning of the root עָלַם. These terms, thus combined, and strengthening each other, establish the Messiah’s pre-existence, yea, eternal pre-existence, almost, if not quite, as completely as any texts in the New Testament. To evade

* 2 John i. 1—14.

† Ps. lxxiv. 12. lxxvii. 6. 12. cxliii. 5. Is. xlv. 21. xlvi. 10. Hab. i. 12. Heb. It signifies “from the east.” Is. ii. 6; and in many other places.

‡ Mic. vii. 20. 2 Chron. xxx. 26. xxxv. 18. Heb.

|| Ps. xc. 2. ciii. 17. Heb.

this, the Chaldee paraphrast expounds it, "His name was foretold of old:" by what authority, or with what propriety, let the reader discover if he can. In this way of paraphrasing, any testimony may be explained away and set aside, by a single stroke of the pen.

We would not, in reasoning from the scriptures with Jews, adduce our Lord's words as evidence in the cause: but they contain an argument, which we call on them to answer if they can; for it completely silenced, though it did not convince, their unbelieving progenitors; and it is equally suited to silence modern Jews, Socinians, and Arians. "What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he? They say unto him, the son of David. He saith unto them, How then doth David in Spirit call him Lord, saying, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool? If then David called him Lord, how is he his Son?"* David died above 1000 years before Jesus was born, and 1800 more have since elapsed: but David, speaking by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, calls the Messiah, "My Lord."† But if the Messiah was predicted 'merely as a man, like other men,' how could he, so many ages before his birth, be David's Lord?

If Jesse had lived till David was established in the kingdom, David might, in some good sense, have been called Jesse's lord, though Jesse's son: but could David with the least propriety, nay, consistently with the common sense of mankind, be called the lord of Obed, Salmon, Boaz, Judah, Abraham, Noah, or Adam, his progenitors? Yet this would be quite as reasonable as to call the Messiah David's Lord, if he had no existence till a thousand years at least after David's death. So conclusive is this argument of the Messiah's pre-existence and authority, as King of Israel; that we may challenge either Jews or nominal Christians to answer it, in any other way, than by denying the inspiration of him who wrote the Psalm in question. And who could be Lord over Israel's anointed king, in the zenith of his authority, but Israel's God and King?

* Matt. xxii. 42—46. Mark xii. 35—37. Luke xxi. 41—44. † Ps. cx. 1.

Since this was written, a Jew has asserted, as he says, on the authority of a Spanish Jew in the eighteenth century, (contrary, not only to the general tradition of former ages; but to the very title of the Psalm, by which it is assigned to David, in the same manner that other Psalms are assigned to him, and indeed to the whole history of David,) that Abner wrote the Psalm and addressed it to David, who was "the Lord" here spoken of! Had the scribes and Pharisees been acquainted with this circumstance, they would not have been put to shame and silence by our Lord's question; at least, not in the first instance. For, had they alledged this solution; he would probably have asked them, whether Abner addressed David in the subsequent words; "The LORD swarc, "and will not repent, Thou art a PRIEST for ever, after the "order of Melchisedek?" I believe it is not needful formally to disprove so unwarranted an assertion; which only proves the extreme difficulty, with which the hundredth and tenth Psalm continues to press the Jews.

When the prophet Isaiah, in the scripture which has been already considered,† says, "Behold a virgin shall conceive, "and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel:" can it be imagined, that the birth of 'a person formed only like that 'of another man,' was predicted?—Why then, did JEHOVAH himself appoint him so extraordinary and significant a name? Is he what his name imports? If so, he is "God manifest "in the flesh."—Thus the evangelist understood it; and thus, apart from his inspiration, he most rationally understood it.†

Nothing can be more explicit, than another prediction of the same prophet, "Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son

* Phil. ii. 6—11.

† Is. vii. 14. Matt. i. 18—25.

“ is given : and the government shall be upon his shoulder :
 “ and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the “ Mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.”*
 Do the various terms here accumulated, on purpose, as it evidently appears, to excite attention and raise expectation, denote nothing more, than the birth of a mere man like other men? Or, is some other than the Messiah meant? These questions the Jews are called upon to answer : or to be silent, as their ancestors were, when they “durst not ask Jesus any “ more questions;”† and for the same reason.

Why should the name of this child be called WONDER-FUL ; if there would be nothing wonderful, either in his conception, birth, or person?—When the angel appeared to Manoah, who enquired his name ; he answered, “ Why ask-“ est thou my name, seeing it is secret,”‡ or WONDERFUL?—(Is.
 נִלְאָה—Judg. וְנִלְאָה) And Manoah afterwards said, “ We shall “ surely die, because we have seen God.”—In like manner, after “ his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor,” it follows ; “ the Mighty God.” Can there remain a doubt, whether the words, which the evangelist introduces the angel speaking, at the birth of Jesus, be the true interpretation?
 “ Unto you is born, in the city of David, a Saviour, who is “ Christ the Lord.”—“ The second Adam, the Lord from hea“ ven.”§

“ The everlasting Father,” עַד-יְמֵי עָלְמָא “ the Father of eternity.”
 Probably Bishop Lowth has given us the true meaning of this clause, “ The Father of the everlasting age.”||

If only two or three such texts suggested the idea, that the predicted Messiah would be God, assuming into personal union with himself the human nature, and thus properly be Immanuel : this would suffice to excite the caution of a humble and reverent reader of the sacred oracles ; even while un-

* Is. ix. 6, 7.

† Matt. xxii. 46.

‡ Judg. xiii. 18—22.

§ Lukeii. 11. 1 Cor. xv. 47.

|| Ps. xxii. 30. Is. liii. 10.

able to receive “the great mystery of godliness” with implicit credence. This, however, is not the case: and though enough has already been said to answer the enquiry, as far as Mr. C. is concerned; yet the vast importance of the subject impels me to adduce still more witnesses.

The Lord, by the Psalmist, most evidently addressing the Messiah, and in special respect to his anointing and kingdom, says, “Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre: thou lovest righteousness and hatest wickedness; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.”* Is He then, concerning whom JENOVAH speaks such language, as he never employs concerning the highest orders of created angels, to be considered, ‘as to the nature of his person formed only like that of another man?’ Or is he IMMANUEL, “God manifested in the flesh?”—‘They who imagine this Psalm to be an epithalamium upon Solomon’s marrying Pharaoh’s daughter, must suppose, that it is foretold, that Solomon was to have a numerous progeny by her, whom he would set up for princes and rulers, up and down the world.†— But this cannot be true: for beside that we read not of any children Solomon had by Pharaoh’s daughter, Rehoboam who succeeded him, was the son of Naamah, an Ammonitess. And so far was he from being able to set up his sons to rule over other countries; that it was with great difficulty, his successor kept two tribes of the twelve stedfast to him.— Certainly, “a greater than Solomon is here.”’—(Bp. Pearce.)

Without entering into the argument, concerning the word ELOHIM, translated, “O God;” (which yet, used in the plural, with singular pronouns, and verbs, as in these verses; and evidently of one single person; is perhaps never used but for one, who is by nature God:) it must in this place, at least

* Ps. xlv. 6, 7. Heb. i. 8, 9.

† Ps. xlv. 16.

mean something vastly superior in nature and person, to those who, as he is Man also, are called "his fellows."

It is not to be expected, that a Jew should allow the words of Zechariah to refer to the Messiah: but a Jew may be called on to shew explicitly, of whom, and of what events, they are to be interpreted, if not a prophecy of the Messiah. "Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, against the Man that is my fellow, (יְהוָה יְהוָה) saith the LORD of Hosts: smite the Shepherd."*—רַבֵּן + quod est socius.—That is, it means the same, with the word translated fellows, in the forty-fifth Psalm. As the Messiah's subjects are "his fellows," partaking with him in the same human nature; so he is "the Man who is the fellow of the LORD of hosts," as partaking of his divine nature.—The word is generally rendered neighbour; and is supposed by many Jews to refer to their nation exclusively. The texts referred to in the margin are, I believe, all in which it occurs.† The same nature is certainly meant, wherever it is used. But can it be conceived that JEHOVAH should use such language as proximus sibi, socius, particeps ejusdem naturæ, to one, who would have no existence for many ages to come; and would then be a mere Man, like other men?§ In this view, the words of the same prophet, and the reference to them by the evangelist,|| are worthy of our attention.—"I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and supplication; and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced; and they shall mourn for him, &c." When has this prophecy received its interpretation, or, when will it; except when the Jews of all ranks, by the pouring out of the Holy Spirit, shall look to Immanuel, (whom their progenitors pierced; and whom they crucify afresh from age to age) with penitent faith and humble confessions, and earnest cries for mercy and forgiveness?*

* Zech. xiii. 7. Matt. xxvi. 31. + Ps. xlv. 7. Heb.

† Lev. vi. 2. xviii. 20. xix. 11. 15. 17. xxiv. 19. xxv. 14, 15. 17.

§ Is. xl. 18, 25. John i. 18 x. 31. || Comp. Zech. xii. 10, with John xx. 39.

Time would fail, and I fear I should weary my readers, should I adduce all the scriptures of the Old Testament, which bear on this question.—But the language of God by the Psalmist, “Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee”—“Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, &c:”—“Blessed are all they who trust in him,” are decisive on the subject.† In what sense could the person spoken of be “the Son of God,” in so appropriate a sense as is here stated? In what sense could he be the object of honour and trust;‡ if he were merely a man like other men? And if the Psalmist did not speak of the Messiah, of whom else can the words used by him be interpreted, without the greatest conceivable impropriety?—Even the words of Solomon, in Proverbs, are not without importance in this enquiry. For, though WISDOM may be considered as an allegorical character; yet the language used is so personal, and so accords with the other scriptures which have been examined; that it is far more rational and obvious to interpret them of the Messiah—“the Word” and “Wisdom of God.” The feminine of the original is no valid objection. Verbum, by which Λογος may be translated, is neuter, and the Arabick word for it is feminine.

Let us then briefly consider the passage—“The LORD possessed me in the beginning of his way; before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was. When there were no depths, I was brought forth; when there were no fountains abounding with water; before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth. While as yet he had not made the earth, nor the fields, nor the highest part of the dust of the world. When he prepared the heaven, I was there;

* Matt. xxiii. 37—39

† Ps. ii. 6, 7, 12. Heb. i. 5.

‡ Ps. cxlvi. 3. Jer. xvii. 5, 6.

“ when he set a compass on the face of the depth. When “ he established the clouds above, when he strengthened the “ fountains of the deep: when he gave to the sea his decree, “ that the waters should not pass his commandment; when “ he appointed the foundations of the earth: then was I with “ him, as one brought up with him, I was daily his de“ light, rejoicing alway before him; rejoicing in the habitable “ part of his earth: and my delights were with the sons of “ men.”*

On this passage, I shall only call the reader's attention to two words used by the inspired writer—“ I was brought forth,” twice used, † חוּלַלְתִּי from חוּל, which signifies among other things, to bring forth young. It is pual, or the passive of piel, or rather pohel. Genitus est: formatus est. (Robertson). It is used in only a few places. “ Art thou the first man that was born; or wast thou made before the hills?” Wast thou brought forth? ‡ “ Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me:” Or, “ Behold I was brought forth in iniquity; even in sin did my mother conceive me” §—“ Dead things are formed from under the waters.”—Or, “ Vast giant-like things are formed from under the waters.” (Bp. Patrick.) “ Giants are brought forth from under the waters.” (רַבֵּאִים) The production of the monsters of the deep is evidently meant; which are brought forth by the parent animal. || These are, I believe, the only places in which this passive form of the verb is used; and they sufficiently fix the meaning of it. ¶ But how is the word applicable to wisdom, as an abstract attribute? In the meaning, which it is most natural to affix to it, the coincidence with the scriptures before adduced, and with the language of the New Testament, concerning the “ WORD;” “ the only begotten Son, who was in the bosom of the Father,”

* Prov. viii. 22—31. † 24, 25. ‡ Job xv. 7. § Ps. li 5.

¶ Job xxvi. 5. ¶ See Ps. xc. 2. Heb.

is peculiarly striking.—The second word, to which I would request the reader's attention, is rendered, "One brought up with him,"* יָנוּחַ (Nutricius, educatus, filius in sinu patris gestatus: εγχολπιος.) Wisdom had said that she was brought forth; now she adds that she 'was in the bosom of the father,'† (Robertson)—A word from the same root.

What shall we say to the words of Jacob, a short time before his death? "And Jacob blessed Joseph, and said, God, before whom my fathers, Abraham and Isaac, did walk; the God, who fed me all my life long; the Angel who redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads. &c."‡ If this Angel were merely a creature, was not Jacob guilty of idolatry, in ascribing to him redemption from all evil,§ and in praying solemnly to him to bless his grandsons? We might multiply examples of this kind; but I must only refer the reader to a few of the scriptures, where they stand recorded. ||

God says of Moses, "The similitude of JEHOVAH shall he behold."¶ Now who or what is this "SIMILITUDE of JEHOVAH," except it be IMMANUEL, "the Image of the invisible God?" Again, Who was "the Angel of God's presence," that saved Israel?†† Who was the Angel of the covenant? "Jehovah, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the Angel of the covenant, whom ye delight in."‡‡

All these things are perfectly easy, according to the Christian doctrine concerning "the great mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh;" but perfectly inexplicable on any other ground: as even the Rabbinical traditions, and endeavours to put another construction upon them, most evidently shew. Here I must cease, not because I have exhausted the subject; but for fear of exhausting the reader's

* Prov. viii. 30. † John i. 18. ‡ Gen. xlviii. 15, 16. § 2 Tim. iv. 18.
 || Ex. iii. 2—6. xxiii. 20—22. Josh. v. 13—15. vi. 1, 2. Judg. xiii. 15—23.
 ¶ Num. xii. 8.  John i. 18. 2 Cor. iv. 4. Col. i. 15. †† Is. lxiii. 9. ‡‡ Mal. iii. 1, patience. Lay all these scriptures together; ponder each separately; appreciate the amount of them as collected together into a focus, like the rays of the sun in the burning glass; and then ask seriously and impartially, Does the Old Testament predict the Messiah, as one, 'the nature of whose person ' would be formed only like that of another man?' With confidence, and without fear of being refuted, I answer the question in the negative.

P. 7. l. 11. 'FORGIVENESS OF SIN.' As this entirely depends on the questions under consideration respecting the person of the Messiah, it needs not any particular answer. If the Messiah were predicted as IMMANUEL, he "has authority to forgive sin." If as a mere man, and 'the nature of his person ' be formed only like that of another man,' he has no such authority.

P. 7—9. l. 21. 'WHEN IS THE MESSIAH TO COME?' Under this head, I shall endeavour to give 'scripture-proof,' that the Messiah is already come. Mr. C. indeed thinks that this must be done from the prophecy of Daniel exclusively, if it be done at all; nay, he speaks as if Christians were ready to concede this! The prediction in Daniel, indeed, when fully and impartially examined, approaches as near to demonstration, as the nature of the case can admit: but before I enter on the consideration of it, or of Mr. C.'s remarks on it; I must prepare the way by examining some other prophecies concerning the Messiah. Jacob, immediately before his death, pronounced blessings on his sons, evidently by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. In blessing Judah he says, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver " from between his feet, till Shiloh come; and to him shall " the gathering of the people be."* שֵׁבֶט signifies, a rod or staff, a sceptre, a tribe. When Jacob spoke, his posterity was no more divided into tribes, than formed into a kingdom.

* Gen. xlix. 10.

But he foretold, that the sceptre, or rod of authority, (like the rod of Moses,) would devolve on Judah. Accordingly it did so, as soon as Israel was numbered and marshalled in the wilderness; and the tribe of Judah was the ruling and reigning tribe, in general, from that time, till the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. The word cannot here signify tribe: for “the tribe shall not depart from Judah,” that is, from the tribe of Judah, gives no tolerable meaning. It is used for a sceptre in two Psalms prophetick of the Messiah;* and in Ezekiel, where it is distinguished from an ordinary rod;†—and by Amos,‡—“The sceptre shall not depart.”—“A king, who is of Judah, and a legislator, shall not both at the same time depart. The sceptre departed in Zedekiah, but the legislator departed not: except when Christ erected his kingdom over the nations, and took away the authority from the former shepherds.’ “The sceptre shall not be removed from Judah; (dux, dominus, dominator, rex) a leader, lord, ruler, king, so called, says R. E. because he used to bear a sceptre in his hand—Kings and the royal authority, according to the three-fold Targum, and the ancient Hebrew Talmudists, and many even more modern; so that they are employed in vain, who interpret it otherwise.’ (Robertson.)

“And a lawgiver from between his feet”—מִחֻקֵּק Part. poheel from חֻק one decreeing, giving laws.§ The word occurs in Numbers, and is translated lawgiver.|| In the plural it is rendered “governors.”¶ “The portion of the “lawgiver;” that is, the portion which Moses, the lawgiver, had prophetically assigned Benjamin; or that which Joshua, the governor, afterwards allotted him. “Judah is my law-

* Ps. ii. 9.—“A rod,” or sceptre, “of iron.” xlv. 6. “The sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre.”

† Ez. xix. 14. “She hath no strong rod, for a sceptre to rule.” The Hebrew מִטָּה עֵץ נְשִׁבֵט לְמִשׁוֹל

‡ Am. i. 5. “Him that holdeth the sceptre.” § Matt. xxiii. 2.

|| Num. xxi. 18.

¶ Judg. v. 14.

 Deut. xxxiii. 21.

“giver,” with evident reference to this text*—“The LORD is our Lawgiver,” &c.† I believe, these are the only places, in which the word occurs in the Hebrew Bible: and they are sufficient to fix its biblical meaning:—viz. One having authority to enact laws, or at least to enforce by power, laws already enacted—ὁ Ἡγούμενος (Sept.)

“Till Shiloh come.”—‘That the ancient Hebrews by Shiloh understood “the Messiah,” the threefold Targum teaches, or the Chaldee paraphrase of Onkelos, Jonathan, and Jerusalem; in which it is written for Shiloh, King Messias,’ (Robertson.) ‘As all the three Targums agree, and the Talmud in the title Sanhedrim; and many other ancient and modern Jews: I will mention only the words of R. Bechai, who confesses, ‘that it is right to understand this verse of the Messiah.’ (Bp. Patrick.)

Different opinions prevail respecting the derivation and meaning of the name: but the Peaceable One, “the Prince of Peace;” as tranquil, ‘and the Author of eternal tranquillity;’ seems the most obvious. This, however, does not at all affect our argument.

It was then expressly predicted by Jacob, when dying, as his words are recorded by Moses, that the Messiah should come, while Judah continued in authority; and while the Jews, so called from Judah, had power to make laws, or to enforce the law of Moses; and to manage the affairs of their nation by a government of their own: but that, afterwards “the gathering of the peoples” (plural) would be to Shiloh; or the obedience of the people would be rendered to him.

It is needless to go through the detail of the history of Israel, and of the ruling and legislative authority of Judah, previous to the Babylonish captivity. From the accession of David to the eve of that event, during almost 500 years, his descendants, from father to son, possessed the kingdom,

* Psalm lx. 7. cviii. 8. Heb. Isaiah xxxiii. 22. Heb.

in lineal succession. Then, indeed, “the tabernacle of “David” fell into ruins: yet, even during the captivity, some authority over the Jews, and their internal affairs, was evidently vested in the descendants of Josiah: and Zerubbabel, under whom the Jews were restored, was of that family. The whole nation, however, was from that time called Jews, or Judeans: and, though not wholly independent, they retained their distinction as a nation, and were generally governed by rulers from among themselves, during the continuance of the Medo-Persian and Macedonian kings; and for some time after the Romans gained the ascendancy. Even these conquerors did not deprive Judah of the sceptre and lawgiver. King Herod, indeed, was by birth an Edomite; but he was a Jew, as proselyted; the Sanhedrin still possessed great authority, with little interference of the Romans, till after the birth of Jesus. But soon after, at the death of Archelaus, Judea was reduced to be a Roman province, under Roman governors: the authority of the Sanhedrin was also greatly limited, and its functions restricted. That court did not possess legal authority to enforce their own sentence against Jesus; but were constrained to apply to Pilate to crucify him: and after a few very short intervals, in which they recovered rather more authority, Jerusalem and the temple were destroyed; the whole civil and ecclesiastical government subverted, and annihilated; the Jews dispersed as wanderers through the nations; and they have continued for almost 1750 years, “without a king, and without a prince, “and without a sacrifice, &c.”*—‘They have been for 1745 ‘years, more destitute of sceptre, lawgiver, and every kind ‘of legislative and judicial authority, than even during the ‘Babylonish captivity.’ This consideration so perplexed a learned Jew, above 700 years ago, that he wrote thus to his friend: ‘I would fain learn from thee, out of the testimonies

* Hos. iii. 3, 4.

‘ of the law and the prophets, and other scriptures, why the ‘ Jews are thus smitten in this captivity wherein they are;
 ‘ which may be properly called THE PERPETUAL ANGER OF ‘ GOD, because it hath no end. For it is now above 1000 ‘ years since we were carried captive by Titus; and yet our ‘ fathers, who worshipped idols, killed the prophets, and cast
 ‘ the law behind their back, were only punished with a seventy ‘ years captivity, and then brought home again; but now there ‘ is no end of our captivity, nor do the prophets promise
 ‘ any.’—(Bp. Patrick.)

Every attempt of the Jews to shew, that they have, or can have, a sceptre, or lawgiver, in their present dispersed state, only proves, how reluctant they are to believe, that Shiloh is come. But he is come; and Jesus is Shiloh: to him has the gathering of many peoples been, and soon I trust the Jews also will be gathered to him; which “will be as life from the “dead,” to all the nations of the earth.*

The word טֹבֵט signifies a rod, and in a very few instances it is used for a rod of correction.† Hence some modern Jews, would interpret the prediction thus, ‘The rod of correction shall not depart from Judah—till Shiloh come.’ But wherever the word is thus used, God is indeed supposed to be the Agent, and man the instrument; but sin the procuring cause. In this place, however, it occurs in a prediction of Judah’s pre-eminence and long continued prosperity; without the least intimation of any thing respecting either sin or correction: and its connection with the word lawgiver wholly excludes the interpretation, as entirely foreign to the subject. Indeed every student of such subjects should remember, that it is absurd, to explain a single clause in a sentence, to mean what is in all respects unsuitable to the rest of the sentence, or of the subject, of which the writer is treating. It is, however, evident, that the interpretation is adopted as a sort of forlorn hope, when the Jews are hard pressed with this prophecy, as to the time of the predicted coming of the Messiah.

* Rom. xi. 15.

† Ps. lxxxix. 32. Lam. iii. 1.

II. The next passage of scripture, which I shall adduce, in proof, that the time fixed by the prophets for the coming of the Messiah, is past, and has been so for many ages; is taken from the prophecy of Haggai—"For thus saith the LORD of hosts; yet once it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land: and I will shake all nations, and the Desire of all nations shall come; and I will fill this house with my glory, saith the LORD of hosts. The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the LORD of hosts. The glory of this latter house shall be greater than that of the former, saith the LORD of hosts; and in this place will I give peace, saith the LORD of hosts."* It is probable, that modern Jews will refuse to admit this as a prediction of the Messiah: but, in that case, it becomes requisite, that they should explicitly shew what events are predicted; and who is marked out by "the Desire of all nations," הַמְּדֵרֶת Desiderium, res desiderabilis, expetibilis, concupiscibilis.† 'That which all nations would desire;' or, 'which would be desirable for all nations.' The Seed of Abraham, in whom all "the families of the earth shall be blessed."—The noun is singular, but the verb is plural, and perhaps the noun also should be plural. A plural noun from the same root is used concerning Daniel;‡ and rendered, "Thou art greatly beloved;" as the Roman emperor was called, Deliciæ humani generis. Some would render it, 'the desirable things of all nations.' The objections to this interpretation are, the great solemnity of the introduction, (6, 7,) and the impropriety of the language, "shall come;" when it should rather be said, "shall be brought." It may well be doubted, whether the

* Hag. ii. 6—9. Heb. xii. 26—29. † 2 Chron. xxi. 20. Ps. cvi. 24. Jer. iii. 19. Heb. ‡ Dan. ix. 23,

‘second temple could exceed that of Solomon, in the splendour and costliness of its ornaments. Prideaux values the gold, with which the holy of holies alone was overlaid, at four millions three hundred and twenty thousand pounds sterling. It seems to me, that, supposing the Messiah to be prophesied of, greater precision in the language could not have been used.’ (Bp Newcome.)—Whoever compares the sixth chapter of the first of Kings, with even the most splendid accounts of the second temple, however “adorned with costly stones and gifts;” must perceive, that the former being overlaid, in every part, even the very “floor, with pure gold,” had a glory, in this respect, which was incomparably beyond that of the second temple, in its highest magnificence. So that nothing, but the presence of the Messiah, such a Messiah as has already been spoken of under the preceding question, could possibly cause the second temple to exceed that of Solomon in glory.—Again, when Solomon’s temple was dedicated, “the Glory of the LORD filled the house:”* but nothing of this kind occurred in respect of the second temple. By the statement of the Jews themselves, the second temple wanted many things, which were the glory of Solomon’s temple; especially the ark of the covenant and the mercy-seat: and what occurred during its whole continuance to compensate and overbalance these deficiencies, except the personal presence of Immanuel; “the Effulgency of JEHOUAH’s glory, and the express Image of his person?”

In this event, in this peculiar honour and distinction, “the glory of the latter house was greater than that of the former;” and from Jerusalem, from that time, JEHOUAH gave peace, spiritual and eternal peace, to all of every nation, who believed in “the Prince of Peace,” and embraced “the gospel of peace.”

It was, then, predicted, that the Messiah should come, during the continuance of the second temple: but that temple has been destroyed above 1740 years; therefore the Messiah is come; and Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah, for he has no competitor.

* 2 Chron. vii. 1, 2.

III. In coincidence with Haggai, Malachi, the last of the Old Testament prophets, in the name of JEHOVAH, uses these words: “Behold I will send my messenger; and he shall “prepare my way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek,
“shall suddenly come to his temple, even the Messenger,”
(or ANGEL,) “of the covenant, whom ye delight in.—Behold
“he shall come, saith the LORD of hosts. But who may “abide the day of his coming?”* Can any man reasonably doubt, whether the messenger here spoken of, as sent “to prepare the way of the Lord,” be the same, who is afterwards foretold under the name of Elijah?† When this herald had “prepared the way, the Lord, whom the Jews sought, would “suddenly come to his temple.” Who is this “Lord, who “would come,” not to the temple of another, not to the temple of JEHOVAH, but to his own temple? Who is He, that is also “the Messenger of the covenant,” as sent by another, for a special purpose? Who is he, in whom the Jews, in prospect “delighted,” yet whose coming they could not “abide?” Whom did the Jews expect at that time? Whom have they ever since been seeking? Is not this the long-expected and desired Messiah? Beyond all doubt, he is meant: yet he must come, while the temple stood; and that temple has been destroyed for above 1740 years! ‘The person whose ‘coming is so solemnly proclaimed, is described by the name of the Lord, יְהוָה, the same whom David called his Lord, † (אֱלֹהֵי) and he is the Lord of the temple, where he will ‘make his appearance.’—‘He shall choose this place to publish his doctrine, and to do many of his miracles.’ (Lowth.)

* Mal. iii. 1, 2.
Luke i. 15—17. 76.

† Mal. iv. 5. Isaiah xl. 3, 4. Mark ix. 13.

‡ Psalm cx. i.

And also, to exercise his authority, and manifest his glory.¶ This is no obscure prophecy: the outline is marked, and clear, and strong; and with that alone, in this place, we are concerned. The time fixed for its accomplishment has long since elapsed: so that either it has already been fulfilled, or it has failed of accomplishment. But if it was not fulfilled in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, when and how has it received its completion? Till this is shewn; we must conclude, with unhesitating confidence, that the Messiah was predicted as coming, while the temple at Jerusalem was in existence; and that Jesus of Nazareth is He.

Grounded on these, and similar predictions, it is well known, that in all the eastern regions an expectation prevailed of some extraordinary person, who was about to arise, and obtain dominion over the nations. ‘Percrebuerat Oriente toto vetus et constans opinio, esse in fatis ut eo tempore Judea profecti rerum potirentur.—An ancient and constant opinion had been spread abroad through all the east, that it was in the fates, that persons coming at that time out of Judea, should obtain the dominion.’ (Suetonius) ‘Pluribus persuasio inerat, antiquis sacerdotum literis contineri, eo ipso tempore fore, ut valesceret oriens, profectique Judea rerum potirentur.—A persuasion was in most men, of its being contained in the ancient writings of the priests, that at that very time, it would be, that the east would become strong, and that persons coming out of Judea, would obtain the dominion.’ (Tacitus.) It seems, that Vespasian, the Roman general in the east, who exercised authority in Judea, availed himself of this opinion, in his successful attempt to mount the imperial throne.—The expected Messiah, at that very time, was to the Jews Ὁ Ἐρχόμενος, “He who cometh;” and the false Christs, or Messiahs, who began to arise about the same time, one after another, furnish a clear proof, that, according to the computation of the ancient Jews, the predicted time for the appearing of the Messiah was arrived. The flatterers of Herod the Tetrarch are said to have considered him as the Messiah, and, as some suppose, they were on that account called Herodians.—Virgil has his Pollio, taken from the Sybilline books, which were manifestly derived from the prophecies of scripture concerning the Messiah; and all was either ‘silent expectation,’ or turbulent expectation, from a short time before the days of Jesus, to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans.—Yet after so many revolving centuries, no Messiah appears, unless Jesus was He! Various have been the devices of the Jews, to account for this delay; which only shews the perplexity to which it reduces them. Mr. C. says, that ‘the end of any thing may be shortened.’ (P. 48. l. 17.) Some have thought that it might also be lengthened, and that 1800 years of delay, have been appointed, as the punishment of their sins. But where do we find in scripture, that God either lengthens, or shortens, the term expressly marked out in any prediction? The deluge came, to a day, at the time previously appointed: Israel was rescued from Egypt on the very day before revealed to Abraham: and, the predicted seventy years of the Babylonish captivity being finished, the Jews were liberated and restored by the decree of Cyrus. All such evasions, therefore, are wholly inadmissible.

* Matt, xxi. 12—15. John ii. 14—21.

Mr. C. has repeatedly said, that Daniel’s prophecy of seventy weeks, ‘is that which we rely on;’ and that ‘we have ‘nothing else upon which we can rely.’ But in fact, I think it has been fully proved from the Old Testament, that the time fixed in prophecy for the coming of the Messiah has long since elapsed: and that the point is incontrovertible, apart from the existence of that prophecy. I must not, however, close this part of our subject, without calling the reader’s attention to it: though the nature of this publication excludes that adequate consideration of it, which is requisite, in order to give the demonstration, contained in it, the full prominency, to which it is entitled.

The solemn introduction to this extraordinary prediction, consisting of Daniel's fasting, and most fervent prayer for his people; and the Lord's sending to him the angel Gabriel, to assure him that his prayer was heard; and that he was "greatly beloved;" with the design, on which Gabriel came, to cause him to "understand the matter and consider the vision;" all these things, I say, combine to shew, that events of no ordinary importance were about to be revealed.

The general term of seventy weeks is dated in Daniel, not from the destruction of the first temple, as Mr. C. repeatedly states; (P. 65. l. 21—23. p. 66. l. 3, 4;) but "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem." This should be particularly noticed: and it hence becomes needful to enquire, What decree, or commandment, noticed in scripture, is that referred to, in the prophecy? for they were all future when Gabriel spoke to Daniel. The decree of Cyrus related merely to the rebuilding of the temple.* That of Darius only confirmed and explained that decree.† The commission given by Artaxerxes to Ezra did not indeed directly contain any thing about restoring and building Jerusalem.‡ But the commission granted to Nehemiah, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, was expressly "a commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem:" so he understood it; and accordingly he rebuilt the walls, and provided for the fortification and replenishing of the city, and defending it against invaders, with the greatest earnestness; not at all intimidated by the reports which were spread concerning his designs.§ These considerations induced some learned men to date the seventy weeks, from Artaxerxes's commission to Nehemiah; but the chronology does not easily admit of it.

* Ezra i. 1—4.

† Ezra vi.

‡ Ezra vii.

§ Neh. ii. iv. vi.

The commission indeed to Ezra was not explicit about the rebuilding of the city, and its walls: yet the expressions used in Daniel may be understood figuratively, and include the re-settling of the whole estate of the Jews, civil and ecclesiastical, which was begun by Ezra, and carried on and completed by Nehemiah. It is, therefore, at present, the general opinion of learned men; that the decree spoken of to Daniel by Gabriel, is that granted by Artaxerxes to Ezra, in the seventh year of his reign. This commission to Ezra, whence the seventy weeks should be dated, was granted about four hundred and fifty-seven years before the Christian Æra. The "seventy weeks," are divided into three parts; "seven weeks," "sixty-two weeks," and "one week." The first seven weeks, or forty-nine years, are generally allotted for the execution of the decree "to restore and to build Jerusalem:" and in about that time, the walls and fortifications of Jerusalem were completed; her streets and houses rebuilt; and the city replenished with inhabitants, as in ancient times. This leads us to four hundred and eight years before the Christian Æra; but this Æra commences, as it is generally agreed, four years after the birth of Jesus.—"Sixty-two weeks," from this time, brings the calculation, to A. D. 26, or the thirtieth year of our Lord's age. It is immaterial in this argument, whether the words, "the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times," be connected with the "seven weeks," during which that work was performed; or with the "sixty-two weeks," during which Jerusalem, amidst turbulent times, and various revolutions, continued a fortified city, previously to the entrance of our Lord on his publick ministry; which seems to have taken place, exactly at the end of the sixty-two weeks, when he was thirty years of age.* Minute exactness is not requisite in such computations, and learned men, who agree in the grand outline, vary a little in subordinate matters ; but this was at least nearly the case. The continuance of our Lord's ministry, till his crucifixion, is likewise differently computed : but, on every computation, he was crucified, during the continuance of the "last week," and after the end of the "sixty and two weeks."—The longer the part of the time is, which we allot to his ministry ; the less remains, for those events which took place soon after his resurrection. Some compute, that he expired on the cross, in the last year of the seventy weeks ; and some, that it was in the middle of the seventieth week ; induced by the clause "in the midst of the week, he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease : " but whether this, "He shall confirm the covenant with many for one week," be understood of the term of John Baptist's ministry, and afterwards of our Lord's till his death : or whether it take in the first successes of the gospel, after his resurrection, we come nearly to the same point : and as near, as the purposed obscurity of prediction, previously to its completion, allows us to expect.

* Luke iii. 23.

Mr. C. indeed thinks, and probably the Jews in general think, it incumbent on us to shew, that the seventy weeks reached to the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple ; because in fact the oblation did not cease till that catastrophe : and then indeed we might be reduced to some expedient similar to the 'shortening the end of a thing ;' but we are under no necessity of having recourse to so desperate a measure. If Jesus be the Messiah, (and if this prophecy relate to the Messiah, that question is decided,) then our interpretation of its language must be taken from Christianity. Now Christians consider, and must consider, all the typical sacrifices and oblations as virtually abolished, when the one great Sacrifice for sin had been offered. They might be tolerated, and attended on by Jewish converts to Christianity, as a matter of expediency, and till they better understood their Christian liberty: but they ceased to be “shadows of good things to come,” instituted acts of worship, and ‘means of grace.’ Commemoration immediately succeeded to prefiguration: Christian ordinances to Jewish: and from the time, when Jesus expired on the cross, “when the veil of the temple “was rent from the top to the bottom,” the dispensation of the Messiah superseded that of Moses. Sacrifice and oblation ceased, as required or accepted by God, from those who neglected the salvation of Christ, and the whole became as a cancelled bond.*

This was not, indeed, fully understood, for some time, even by the first preachers of Christianity; and if we adopt the opinion of those, who compute that the last week of the seventy reached till two or three years after the death of Jesus; till his gospel had been fully offered to the Jews as a nation, and rejected by them; or till the gentiles began to be admitted into the Christian church; our general conclusion will not be, in the least, affected. From this period, according to Christianity, the Jews, as such, ceased to be the people of God, who now “called his people by another name.”† The nation was, from that time, left in the condition of a condemned criminal; yet “the long-suffering of God waited, as “in the days of Noah,” that individuals “might save themselves from that untoward generation.” Of this long-suffering many tens and hundreds of thousands availed themselves: but when the time predicted by our Lord arrived, before that “generation had passed away,” the term of God’s long-suffering being expired, he fulfilled the rest of Daniel’s prophecy. “And the people of the prince, that shall come, shall destroy “the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be “with a flood; and to the end of the war desolations are “determined.” — “The overspreading of abomination shall “make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that

* Col. ii. 14.

† Isaiah lxxv. 15. Acts xi. 26.

“determined shall be poured upon the desolate.” Then the virtual abolition of the sacrifice and oblation became actual; yea, the observance of the law of sacrifices became impracticable, as it has now been for above 1700 years. But no date is in the prophecy explicitly fixed to any event subsequent to Messiah’s death, and the confirming of his covenant with many.

It would be wholly unsuitable to the object of this publication, to enter, critically and fully, into the expressions used by the angel Gabriel, in the twenty-fourth verse.* Perhaps to “finish the transgression,” means, the commission of that crime by the Jewish nation, as the counsel of their rulers, scribes and priests, adopted by the people, (when demanding the crucifixion of Jesus, they exclaimed, “His blood be “on us and on our children;†) by which the measure of their guilt was filled up: for the original word is not used by Moses for any of the legal sacrifices. “To make an end of sin,” or sin-offering, (as the word is often used) evidently means, to abrogate the laws of sin-offerings. “To make reconciliation for iniquity, and bring in everlasting righteousness,” can mean nothing less, than to offer that atonement, and finish that righteousness; by which all the people of the Messiah should be pardoned, reconciled to God, justified, made holy, and eternally saved. “To seal up the vision and prophecy,” or “the Prophet,” means, to fulfil, and seal as accomplished, all the visions and predictions of the prophets concerning the Messiah, and to seal him as the Prophet of the new dispensation; “For him hath God the Father sealed.”‡ “And to anoint the most holy,” either the ‘Holy One of God,’ or the true holy of holies; of which that of the tabernacle, consecrated by anointing, was a type

* Mr. C. in quoting Daniel’s prophecy, has wholly omitted three out of the five verses of which it consists.

† Matt. xxvii. 25.

‡ John vi. 27.

and shadow.* It is not material to our argument, whether the very best interpretation of each clause is here adopted, or not; and I am very willing that others should interpret some of them differently. But, however interpreted, they must all have had their fulfilment in the Messiah here predicted; for the time has long since expired: as also must the clause, "He shall confirm the covenant with many for one week," "and he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." Mr. C. stops in his quotation at the end of the 26th verse; but the reader's attention must be called to the concluding verse: "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week, he shall cause the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations, he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate."† It is obvious to consider "Messiah the Prince," as the person spoken of, who would do all these things. JEHOVAH is not mentioned; and it is not easy to conceive in what sense the Roman emperor, of whom some would interpret it, could be said "to confirm the covenant with many for one week." But I here only draw the reader's attention to the language: the prophecy will come before us, on other topics, when some of the expressions will be more fully considered. At present we must keep to the main argument; namely, to prove that the Messiah was to come, before the destruction of the second temple.

Is then the Messiah, predicted by all the prophets, here intended, or is some other person? The words, "Messiah the Prince," are in fact more explicit, than those used in any other part of Scripture. Nothing can be more natural and easy, than the application of every clause to Jesus Christ, according to the New Testament: but if a Jew, (as he must, continuing a Jew,) reject this application; let him

* Ex. xxx. 23—26. xl. 9. Heb. ix. 22—25.

† Dan. ix. 27.

shew in whom not only one or two clauses may scem to have been fulfilled; but in whom, and in what events, each part and expression of the prophecy, without exception, received its accomplishment.

We may now close this part of the argument, by briefly adverting to what Mr. C. has advanced against the Christian interpretation. (P. 7. l. 21.) That which relates to the seventy weeks, and the time when Messiah should be cut off, has been fully considered. Jesus was crucified at the time predicted, and the several consequences followed, as foretold by the prophet.

P. 8. l. 19. Not one of the apostles, &c. The apostles adduced those parts of the Old Testament, which their argument required: but they never professed to bring forward every prediction of the Messiah contained in it. Several, even of those which the Jews allow to have been spoken of the Messiah, are not quoted: so that their silence is no proof that 'they could not have thought of such a thing.' But there might be special reasons for their conduct as to this prophecy. Nothing so irritated the minds of the Jews, in those days, as the declaration, that the temple would be destroyed, and its worship terminated, according to the predictions of the crucified Jesus.* No prophecy so clearly predicted these events, and so connected them with the "Messiah, "the Prince, being cut off," as this of Daniel: the apostles could alledge and expound prophecies in abundance to prove their point without it: it was their object to convince, not to exasperate; and most of the New Testament was written before the destruction of Jerusalem. This prophecy is however referred to in the gospels;† and it must be included in those prophecies, which Mr. C. afterwards mentions, as proofs

* Acts vi. 13, 14. xxi. 28.

† Comp. Dan. ix. 27, with Matt. xxiv. 15. Mark xiii. 14. Luke xxi. 20.

that Jesus was not a prophet, but only repeated the prophecies of the Old Testament. (P. 67, 68.)

P. 8. l. 24. We read, &c. Whatever objection a Christian may have to the criticism of this passage, he can have none to the conclusion deduced; ‘Messiah, which means the king, “shall be cut off,” but not to him, מלך יִסָּר; that is, he ‘shall have no successor.’ For the Messiah, when “cut off “out of the land of the living;” when JENOVAH made his soul an “offering for sin,” yea, “because he poured out his “soul unto death; saw his seed, and prolonged his days, “and the pleasure of the LORD prospered in his hands.”* Thus Jesus arose from the dead, ascended into heaven, reigns over all worlds, ‘has no successor;’ but “must reign till all “enemies be put under his feet.”† I do not think this the meaning of the clause; but, waving this, on Mr. C.’s interpretation, it clearly marks Jesus as the promised Messiah:— ‘By which is pointed out, that there shall be no more kingly ‘power in the Jewish nation.’—“The sceptre was departed “from Judah, and a lawgiver from between his feet; Shiloh “was come, and to him,” ever since, “the gathering of the “peoples has been.”

P. 8. l. 32. ‘This Messiah,’ &c. ‘Agrippa was of the ‘stock of Abraham, and king over Israel.’ (P. 9. l. 5.)—King Agrippa was a descendant of Herod, who was of ‘the stock ‘of Edom,’ but a proselyte to Judaism. At the death of his father Herod,‡ Judea became again a Roman province; but, after some years, the Emperor Claudius made Agrippa king of Chalcis; and afterwards gave him the tetrarchies of Philip and Lysanias; namely, Ituræa, Trachonitis, and Abilene: all these regions were without the boundaries of the promised land. But Nero, along with some towns in Peræa, gave him part of Galilee. Agrippa also possessed some authority, as deputy of the Roman emperors, over the treasury of the temple, and the succession of the high priesthood: and he seems to have used this authority, in deposing and advancing the high priests, without regard to the law of God.—But Felix, and Festus, and other Roman governors, exercised the whole civil authority in Judea all the while. In what sense then was Agrippa, “of the stock of Abraham, and king over Israel?” How could he be called “Messiah the Prince,” by way of emphasis and distinction? Or how can the several parts of the prophecy be applied to him?

* Is. liii. 8. 10. 12.

† 1 Cor. xv. 25.

‡ Acts xii. 23.

My scanty library does not give me the means of ascertaining, in what manner Agrippa was cut off; it seems from Josephus, that he was connected with the Romans and with their armies, in the beginning of that war, which ended in the destruction of Jerusalem; but afterwards we read nothing concerning him. As to ‘his son Monves,’ I own I never before read his name. I cannot find it in the Roman historians, or in Josephus. I suspect, from the formation of the word, that it is taken from the Rabbinical writers; and I should be glad to be informed, on what authority this part of the narrative rests. It is clear, however, that both the death of Agrippa, and every thing relating to his son Monves, are almost overlooked by historians. If it had not been for Josephus, and for the writer of the Acts of the apostles, even king Agrippa would scarcely have been known to posterity. And can it be conceived, that such an obscure, petty, dependent prince, ruling by the courtesy of the emperors over a part of Galilee, and some adjacent regions inhabited by gentiles, (while Judea was ruled by Roman governors,) was “Messiah the Prince;” and that his obscure death, and that of his son, were the events intended by the Holy Spirit, in this prophecy, which was introduced with such solemnity, and concludes with such awful denunciations of judgments on the Jews? It does not even appear, that the slaughter of Agrippa had any political connection with these judgments: and being the act of the Romans, could not be the deserving cause of them, before God.

Indeed, this (as far as I can learn) new interpretation, is a confession of the insuperable difficulties, to which Daniel's prophecy reduces all those, who refuse to own Jesus, as MESSIAH THE PRINCE.

P. 9. l. 7. Thus far, &c. It is not difficult or uncommon for men to boast of victories which they have not obtained; and with such evident complacency, as shews that they really think they have obtained them.

L. 9. The coming of the Messiah, &c. Mr. C. has, however, bestowed considerable pains in the subsequent pages, to ascertain this unknown mystery. In fact, scarcely any predictions in the scripture are so clearly dated, as those which relate to the coming of the Messiah. This has already been shewn. The reader must judge in what way the two texts, adduced in proof of this assertion, bear at all on the subject. In the first, (l. 12.) the Messiah returning from the slaughter of his enemies, represented by Edom, says, "for the day of vengeance is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed is come." He had had it long at heart to execute vengeance on his enemies, and to rescue his people, and the fixed time was at length arrived. Nothing is said of the coming of the Messiah, but of his victory over his enemies. Whatever God determines, whether revealed or concealed, is "in his heart:" and the time being come implies that it was no longer concealed.* In the second, (l. 15,) Daniel was 'longing to know,' not 'the coming of the Messiah,' as Mr. C. asserts, (l. 25,) of whom no mention is made; but when God "should have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people;"† that is, the time of the gathering of Israel from their dispersions, their conversion to Christ, their restoration, and the final triumphs of the gospel: and even of these events, the prophet had received such clear revelations, as have been a clue and guide to the expositors of prophecy, in every subsequent age; though they could not fully understand every thing respecting it.

* Is. lxiii. 1—6.

† Dan. xii. 7, 8.

P. 9. l. 28. 'THE MESSIAH IS NOT YET COME. We must look, &c.' This whole passage (P. 9—11,) is a mixture of scriptural truth; of human traditions, which are not entitled to the least credit; and of inaccuracies of little consequence.

P. 10. l. 1. 'The third, &c.'—The kingdom of the Messiah is afterwards stated to be 'absolutely earthly,' (P. 36—39,) and is such a kingdom, perfect, and to 'endure for evermore?'

L. 19. 'Angels could give no names, &c.' Angels did not give names to the animals, for they were not directed to do it: but we have no reason to conclude from any thing revealed in the Old Testament, that man was ever superior to angels, or equal to them: man also was created with a material body, angels are immaterial spirits. Our main argument, however, is no ways affected by the opinion.—Again, we are not informed what Satan was when God created Adam: we only know, that, concealed in the serpent, he tempted and ruined our first parents, and all their posterity in them.

P. 10. last line, 11, first line. 'Six thousand years,—but no longer.'—Mr. C. has then discovered 'the unknown mystery:' for 'this last period will commence with the coming of 'the Messiah.' (P. 9.) He will then come exactly at the end of the six thousand years from the creation: and it is not difficult to compute those years, principally from the Old Testament. The present is about 5818; and one hundred and eighty-two years, or about that time, will complete the six thousand years. Six thousand years, however, from the creation, either as the time of the coming of the Messiah, or to the millennium, is no where stated in scripture: yet many Christians have conjectured, that the millennium will begin at the end of six thousand years; and argued for it with considerable plausibility.—But this has not the least relation to the coming of the Messiah; and is no more than a remote consequence of that event.

P. 11. l. 7. ‘Of what use, &c.?’—It must appear to every real Christian, that the coming of a Messiah, to establish an ‘absolutely earthly kingdom,’ can never be of much use to sinful dying men; but as Mr. C. repeats this question afterwards, I shall endeavour, once for all, to give it a distinct answer. Corruption admits of degrees; and it might be of some use for the Messiah to come, even if only to render the world far less corrupt than it otherwise would have been.

P. 11. l. 12. ‘THE NEW WORLD will commence,’ &c. It will commence at the end of 6000 years from the creation, and with the coming of the Messiah! On this ground, the time of the Messiah’s coming, so far from being unknown, never ‘told to any of the prophets,’ ‘never revealed;’ (P. 9.) is known beforehand with an unexampled certainty and exactness.

L. 16. ‘Above the angels,’—Some Christians have collected an opinion of this kind, from the relation in which the redeemed stand to Immanuel, and from the Revelation of St. John;* but not a hint of the kind is given in the Old Testament.—It does not appear, how this most exalted view of ‘the new world under the Messiah,’ can consist with his kingdom ‘being absolutely earthly,’ or with the view given in the subsequent pages, of the state of the gentiles, (that is, of an immense majority of the inhabitants of the earth,) under the reign of Messiah.

P. 11. l. 22. ‘THE MESSIAH IS NOT YET COME. We are assured, &c.’ Isaiah in the text referred to, says, “The Redeemer shall come to Zion; and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the LORD. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the LORD, &c.” With whom? Not with Israel, as a nation, but “with them that turn from transgression in Jacob.” — But how will it be with those, who “do not turn from transgression in Jacob?” Let us, however, hear in what way the apostle quotes it from the Septuagint: “There shall come out of Zion, the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant with them, when I shall take away their sins.”* When the Deliverer, or Redeemer, shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; then he will “take away their sins,” by forgiveness, confirm his covenant with them, and so all Israel “shall be saved.” But till ungodliness is taken away, this will not be the case. Thus, in coincidence with all the prophecies of Israel’s restoration, that event is connected with their conversion from sin and ungodliness; not with the coming of the Messiah, which is not once mentioned, in connection with their restoration.† The subject on which the apostle was discoursing, shewed, that he had in prospect, Israel’s receiving Jesus as their Messiah and Saviour: indeed, not the coming of the Messiah, but believing in him, is effectual for the blotting out of sin, either of Jew or Gentile: and how can the author persuade himself, or hope to persuade others, that the apostle meant by one line in a quotation, to contradict and disprove that fact, which he spent and ended his life, in unremitting labours and sufferings, to render universally credited, viz. that the Messiah was come, and that Jesus the Nazarene was the Messiah? Or how does all this accord with Mr. C.’s opinion, concerning the absolutely earthly kingdom of the Messiah, and that the Messiah will not forgive sins? (See, on 7.)

* Rev. iv. 4. v. 9—14.

P. 12. l. 4. ‘THAT THE MESSIAH, &c.’ There is not one word in the quotation from Leviticus, or in the whole passage, concerning the Messiah; so that nothing can be inferred from it respecting his coming. The crisis in the condition of Israel, is never stated to be "the coming of the Messiah;" but "their uncircumcised hearts being humbled;" which implies their repentance and conversion, and their receiving in humble faith that Saviour, whom they have pierced. Could Christians produce no better proof, that the Messiah is come, than Mr. C. does that he is not come, their cause would be hopeless.

* Is. lix. 20, 21. Rom. xi. 26, 27.

† Lev. xxvi. 41, 42. Deut. iv. 29, 30. xxx. 1—10. Jer. xxxii. 39—41. Ez. xi. 17—20. xxxvi. 24—28. xxxvii. 23—28. Hos. iii. 4, 5. xiv. 1—8. Zech. xii. 10—12.

L. 18. 'Hear you may learn, &c.' Whence may we learn these things? Not a word is said either about the first or the second temple, or even the tabernacle, or the coming of the Messiah, in any of the texts referred to. I suppose the word often referred to (מִקְדָּשִׁים) in our version rendered "sanctuaries," by Mr. C. translated temples, contains the argument; but it is used in the plural, when only one temple could be meant, if at all included;* of the sanctuaries of Tyre;† of the idol temples of the kingdom of Israel;‡ and in a variety of other senses.—Nothing therefore can be inferred from this single word. In fact, if the two temples exclusively had been meant, the dual number would most properly have been used.

Israel may "pine away in their iniquities," as well for the guilt of "crucifying afresh" from age to age, the promised Messiah, by impenitent unbelief and determined opposition, as for any other of their national sins: and, as the nation has not during many ages been guilty of gross idolatry, this seems an obvious reason of their long-continued abject situation. If this be the case, welcoming in penitent faith this long-rejected Saviour, must be the introduction to their restoration.—And if this be not the guilt, for which God so permanently contends with them, (as I am most fully convinced it is,) let them assign a more adequate and satisfactory reason, for the unprecedented dealings of the Lord with their favoured nation, for above seventeen hundred years.

* Ps. lxxiii. 17. Ez. xxi. 2. Heb.

† Ez. xxviii. 18. Heb.

‡ Am. vii. 9. Heb.

P. 12. l. 23. ‘The first covenant, &c.’ How does this agree with the words of the prophets? * ‘The first covenant,’ however, was not that made at Mount Sinai, but that made with Abraham, “which the law which was four hundred and thirty years after could not disannul.” † Mr. C. has indeed quoted the forty-fifth verse, which seems to refer to the Sinai-covenant; ‡ but he has omitted several preceding verses, which should not be unnoticed. “If they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass which they have trespassed against me, and that also they have walked contrary unto me; and that I have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity: then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember, and I will remember the land.” ‡— ‘Christ could not be the Messiah:’—that is, ‘The anointed could not be the anointed!’

P. 12. last line. ‘How came the prophet to take notice of Edom?’ Answer,—The Edomites hated Israel, and exulted over the desolations of Jerusalem, and the miseries of the Jews, with mingled cruelty and scorn. § It was, therefore, natural for Jeremiah, when mourning over these desolations and miseries, to think of the Edomites: and it pleased God to employ him to foretel, that judgment from the wrath of God, would ere long overtake these insulting foes, and that the Jews would soon return from captivity, and be reinstated in prosperity. Edom is indeed sometimes used, as a general

* Jer. xxxi. 31—34. Ez. xvi. 62.

† Gal. iii. 15—29.

‡ Lev. xxvi. 45.

‡ Lev. xxvi. 40—42.

§ Ps. cxxxvii. 7. Jer. xlix. 7—22. Ez. xxv. 8—14 xxxv.

Am. i. 11, 12. Obad. 1—16.

name, for the enemies of God's people: but whether it be in this place or not; it is certain, that not one word occurs in it concerning the Messiah, or the time of his coming. It is also obvious to remark, that if EDOM be the general name of the enemies of the people of God, of whatever nation; ISRAEL also is the general name of God's people, though of other nations. Mr. C. I suppose, considers Edom as the proper title of the Roman empire, in every form. If I misunderstand him, he must set me right. But, however this may be, or whether his reasonings concerning Israel remaining a prisoner, 'so long as Edom is master,' be logical and well-grounded or not; it is manifest, that a portion of scripture in which the Messiah is not hinted at, can prove nothing either way, concerning the time of his coming; except to those, who have unscripturally associated the ideas of his coming with 'the restoration of Israel:' and as fact proves that Israel is not restored, no further proof can be requisite to such persons: but 'an honest man,' (P. 13. l. 26.) having well considered this argument, may think with me, that it has no relation at all to the present argument.

P. 13. last line but one. 'Five hundred years before Christ.' The Lamentations were written after the destruction of the first temple; the second was not destroyed till above seventy years after the birth of Jesus: yet Mr. C. in other places, computes that no more than 490 years occurred between the one and the other! (P. 65, 66.)

P. 13. last line. 'He could do no good to Israel.' Jesus did good to many tens of thousands of Jews, personally and by his apostles: but what physician can do good to an obstinate patient, who not only rejects his advice and his medicines, but also—Fit pugil, et medicum urget?—Becomes a pugilist, and fights his physician?

P. 14. l. 11. 'PROOF FROM THE GOSPEL. &c.' This is a vain attempt to make the gospel destructive of itself. It would be indeed most wonderful, if Jesus, who before Caiaphas and Pontius Pilate avowed himself the Messiah, and who was crucified for that avowal, should be found just before to testify that he was not the Messiah! (l. 24.) But this is not the only instance, in which our Lord is introduced, as renouncing the claims, which he was crucified for advancing. Mr. C. has it fully settled in his own mind, that the coming of the Messiah, and the restoration of Israel, must occur at the same time: and thus he is every where led to assume as self-evident, the very point which he ought to prove.

Our Lord's claim to be a Prophet will come under consideration in another place. At present the expression, "until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," may require a brief consideration.

WHAT THEN ARE WE TO UNDERSTAND BY "THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES?" Considerable weight is laid on these words; and Mr. C. takes for granted that they mean, 'until the measure of the iniquities of the Gentiles shall be full:' (l. 28—31.) but they appear to me to admit of a very different interpretation.—Ἀχρι πληρωθῶσι καιροὶ ἐθνῶν; "Until the times of the nations shall be accomplished," or, "shall have been fulfilled." No expression, at all resembling this, occurs in the Old Testament; or even in the New, except that of the apostle, in the Epistle to the Romans: * αχρις ἔ το πληρωμα των εθνων εισελθῆ, "Until the time when the fulness of the nations shall come in." When the times shall arrive, for the fulness of the gentiles to be brought into the church; "the blindness," which "in part has happened to Israel," shall be removed, "and so all Israel shall be saved."† This, or somewhat to this effect, is the evident meaning of the apostle: and from his argument it may be concluded, at least with great probability, that, according to his views, the conversion and restoration of Israel will occur nearly at the time, when in the purpose of God, “the fulness of the nations” shall become the subjects of Jesus Christ: and, that the conversion of Israel, occurring at this crisis, shall introduce that grand display of the power, and truth, and mercy of God; and be “as life from the dead” to the nations of the world, and be one grand means of accomplishing it. Certainly the apostle meant the conversion of the nations; and there can be little doubt but that the words of our Lord had reference to the same.—Till that period shall arrive, “Jerusalem shall” continue “trodden under foot of the Gentiles.”

* Rom. xi. 25.

† Rom. xi. 25—31. 2 Cor. iii. 13—16.

I do not deny, that the restoration of Israel will be preceded, and attended, by most tremendous judgments on many nations. In this the prophecies both of the Old and New Testament agree.* ‘The restoration of Israel’ will, no doubt, be one grand part of the Messiah’s triumph over the beast, the false prophet, and the old serpent.† Besides antichristian opponents, the Mohammedans and idolaters, in Canaan and in the east, will no doubt vehemently oppose the reinstatement of Israel in the promised land; as the Canaanites did in the days of Joshua, and with the same event. But these dreadful scenes will be of no very long duration, and will introduce “the times of the Gentiles;” or the conversion of all nations to Christianity. Among the converts to our holy religion, Israel will assuredly have a peculiar pre-eminence, as the nation through which God has blessed all other nations: not, as they vainly dream, by ruling over them with haughty dominion; which they will cease to desire, when they fully-experience the loving spirit of Christianity: but by the willing honour, and grateful deference, rendered them by their fellow Christians. Then they will understand, and enter into the apostle’s meaning; “There is neither Jew nor Greek, “there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor “female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.”‡

* Ez. xxxviii. xxxix. 1—16. Joel iii.

† Rev. xix. 11—21.

‡ Gal. iii. 26—29.

“The times of the Gentiles,” seem to signify the times, during which the Gentiles are permitted to keep possession of Jerusalem; namely, till the Jews be converted unto Christ: then their times will be fulfilled;—probably, the Jews will be restored to their own land, and vengeance will be executed on those who oppose their return. For these events seem to be predicted, introductory to the calling of the nations into the church. Or, the times appointed for the calling of the Gentiles, or all nations, into the church, may be meant. When this draweth nigh, the Jews will recover their holy city.’ (Family Bible, Note, Luke xxi. 20—24.)

Nothing can be more clear, than that such a time is foretold throughout the Old Testament. I shall not, in this place, anticipate a question, which will soon come under our consideration: but let the reader carefully consider the texts referred to below; and he must be convinced, I should think, that the times of the Gentiles in this sense may confidently be expected: for “the scripture cannot be broken.”* Whether this conversion of the nations, to the worship of the God of Israel, shall be by their being proselyted to Judaism, as the Jews sometimes appear to admit, or by their conversion to Christianity, may with many persons be a matter of doubt: but the predictions are undeniable; and the times when these shall be fulfilled, are “the times of the Gentiles;” and not the times when the Gentiles, at large, shall be destroyed, or crushed, which is no where foretold by the prophets. On the contrary, after several predictions of dreadful judgments on this, or the other, nation, it is added, “Yet will I bring again the captivity of Moab, in the latter days.” The same is said of Ammon and of Elam.† The times are coming, not when Judah shall rule with iron rod over all nations; but when all nations shall be gathered to Judah’s SHILOH; receive from

* Gen. xii. 3. xxii. 18. Ps. xxii. 27. lxxii. 17. Is. ii. 1—4. xix. 24, 25; lx. Jer. xvi. 19. Mic. iv. 1—4. Mal. i. 11.

† Jer. xlviii. 47. xlix. 6. 39.

Judah “the oracles of God;” worship, and serve, and bless themselves, in the God of Israel; and honour and love Israel as the chief nation on earth, and the source of blessings to all other nations. And surely, it might be thought, that this would be more gratifying even to Jews, than their present expectations of lordly dominion: and certainly it will be so, when the Lord shall circumcise their heart, to love him with “all their heart.” Then pre-eminence in love, and gratitude, and honour, from all the happy partakers of their own Messiah’s reign, will be far more delightful to them, than any worldly superiority.

P. 15. l. 1. ‘This declaration, &c.’ The apostle, in the passage here in part quoted, is most undeniably speaking of the eternal judgment of individuals, whether Jews or Gentiles.* The Jew, “who is contentious, and does not obey the truth, but obeys unrighteousness;” will have the first and largest portion “of tribulation and anguish,” &c; but the believing and obedient Jews, the first and largest portion of glory and honour, “in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ.” This is the apostle’s express meaning; and the passage has nothing to do, in the least, with the state of Jews and Gentiles, as to this present world. The degree, whether of anguish or of glory, and not the priority in time, is intended; for both will be eternal.

P. 15. l. 11. ‘You see, &c.’ The texts referred to below, may shew how Jesus and his apostles understood his predictions on this subject.†

L. 25. ‘Not one of, &c.’ It is an attempt requiring no ordinary measure of heroism, for a man to undertake to prove, from the New Testament, that none but Jews would be the servants of God! The ancient Jews had no idea of an attempt of this kind. It is far from certain, that the Jewish converts are exclusively intended by the hundred and forty-four thousand, who were sealed as the servants of God, “out of all the tribes of the children of Israel;” it being improbable, in the highest degree, that there should be exactly the same number out of each tribe. The innumerable number “of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues,” who are afterwards mentioned, are not said to have been sealed, and so Mr. C. excludes them from the title, “the servants of God.”—It is, however, said in the subsequent verses, “these are they, which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple:* and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.”† If we, poor sinners of the Gentiles, may attain such felicity as this, we shall need no other honour.

* Rom. ii. 4—16.

† Matt. xxi. 33—46. xxiii. 34—39. xxiv. 15—22. Luke xix. 41—44. xx. 15—18. xxi. 20—24. Acts iii. 22, 23. iv. 10—12. 25—28. vii. 37—53. xiii. 40, 41. xxviii. 23—28. Rom. ix. 1—3. 24—33. 1 Thes. ii. 13—16. Jam. v. 1—6.

Much of what follows is assertion—Part we assent to, and part we dissent from. But the great point in controversy, concerning Jesus, (Whether he be the predicted Messiah, or some other is to be expected,) is not concerned in the interpretation, well or ill-grounded, of the texts adduced; and therefore I shall not further notice them.

P. 16. l. 3. ‘Now when, &c.’ The prophecy of Zechariah, here in part quoted, has been shewn, by the author of these remarks, to have had a partial, yet illustrious, fulfilment, in the days of the apostles, and in the succeeding ages:

* Rev. xxii. 2–4.

† Rev. vii. 9–17. Is. xxv. 6–8.

but, that it will have a still more enlarged and glorious accomplishment, when God shall restore Israel, and make the Israelites his willing instruments in converting the Gentile world.* An extract from this may here be properly introduced.—‘The conquerors and destroyers of the Jews have become the worshippers of the God of the Jews. JEHOVAH has superseded Jupiter, and all the other pagan deities, through the vast dominions of the Greeks and Romans; not to dwell on the utter extinction of the ancient idolatry of Chaldea, Persia, and Egypt. The Lord has “furnished all the gods of the earth; and men worship him, every one from his place, even all the isles of the heathen.”† The God of the Jews, long unknown, except to that obscure and oppressed people, is now the professed Object of worship, throughout the mightiest and most distinguished nations on earth. This is a fact, that cannot be denied or doubted.’ ‘But in what way and by what means was it effected?’ “Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the LORD of hosts.” “Ten men shall take hold, out of all the languages of the nations; even shall take hold of the skirt of him who is a Jew, saying, We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you.” Compulsion was not one of the means employed: the conduct, of the persons here stated, was the effect of conviction.—‘The Redeemer was a Jew; all his apostles were Jews, all the seventy disciples, and all the first evangelists, or missionaries to the Gentiles; yea, and all the first converts to Christianity, who, dispersed into various parts of the world, carried among the Gentiles the word of salvation, were Jews!—At the lowest computation, each Jew, (converted to Christianity,) won over ten idolaters to “lay hold on his skirt, and to say, We will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you.”’

* Sermon preached before the London Society, entitled, ‘The Jews a blessing to the nations.’

† Zeph. ii. 11.

L. S. ‘Where is the boasting, &c.’ I believe no real Christian boasts or glories over the Jews: by the gospel, “boasting” is excluded,” compassion and good-will, yea, a kind of respect and gratitude to the Jews, as a nation, must spring from genuine Christianity: nor is the sentiment, of glorying over the Jews, common even among nominal Christians.

P. 16. 1. 10. ‘BY THE WITNESS, &c.’—‘Here he appointed, &c.’ L. 16. The question of the apostles to our Lord, which was grounded on some degree of misapprehension, involved three enquiries, 1. “When shall these things be?”—2. “What shall be the sign of thy coming?”—3. “And of the end of the world?” And his reply without noticing their misapprehension, gave distinct answers to each. The words, “This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled;” especially answers the question, “When shall these things be?” That is, When shall these buildings of the temple be so entirely destroyed, that “not one stone shall be left upon another?”* The answer, however, includes also, the total subversion of the Jewish constitution, ecclesiastical and civil. It is also evident, that by “the coming of Christ,” the apostles, at this time, understood his coming to judgment, which they supposed would be at “the end of the world.” Nothing could be further from their minds, than the coming of the Messiah, in the sense of Mr. C. and modern Jews: they believed, that Jesus was “the Messiah, the Son of the living God;” and consequently that, in this sense, the Messiah was come—But though Jesus did not see good, fully to rectify their mistakes on this head; leaving that to the times, when the Holy Spirit should be poured out upon them; he evidently distinguished between his coming, in the power of his providence, to execute vengeance on Jerusalem and the Jews; and his final coming to judgment. The one was so connected with the destruction of the temple; that it may be allowed to be comprised in the words, "This generation shall not pass away, till all these things be fulfilled." But of the other he says, "Of that day knoweth no man, no, not the angels in heaven, but my Father only."* If, indeed, we are called on to argue with Jews from the New Testament, we must explain one part of the New Testament by another: and no impartial man, reading the account of the three evangelists carefully, can doubt, but that the coming of Christ, in most parts of these chapters, is not spoken of, as personal and visible; but he came by the Roman armies, the instruments of his avenging justice. "As the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even to the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be: for wheresoever the carcase is, there shall the eagles be gathered together."† A Jew may consistently treat the whole of the prophecy as uninspired, and so, inconclusive: but he can with no consistency deny this to be intended by Jesus, in what he spake to the disciples. In the sense intended, he came about A. D. 71.; within considerably less than forty years, after he delivered this prediction; and so before "that generation was passed away." This, therefore, can prove nothing, in the argument before us: for an entirely different subject was treated of.—Let it be noticed, that Mr. C. in order to render his arguments more plausible, selects two verses, one at the beginning, the other, near the end of the chapter, omitting all that intervene; but the whole read together leaves a far different impression on the mind.

* Matt. xxiv. 1—3. Mark xiii. 1—4. Luke xxi. 6, 7.

P. 16. l. 23. THE MESSIAH, &c. 'When the Messiah, &c.' Answer.—Where does the writer learn, that when 'Messiah shall come, all the sons of Adam will be of one language?' Nothing is predicted concerning this in the Old Testament: the passage most like it runs thus, "Then will

* Matt. xxiv. 34—37. Mark xiii. 30—37.

† Matt. xvi. 28. xxiv. 27, 28. 30. 37. 39. Mark xiii. 26. Luke xxi. 30—36.

“I turn to the people a pure language; that they may all call upon the name of the LORD, to serve him with one consent.”* But not a word either precedes, or follows, concerning ‘the coming of the Messiah:’ and Christians expect, that during the days of the Messiah, (but long after his coming,) the prediction will have a most glorious accomplishment; and men “shall worship God, every one from his place, even all the isles of the Gentiles.”† Thus all, both Jews and Gentiles, shall serve the God of Israel, not as of different religions, but “with one consent:” not in one place, but “every one from his place.”‡

Mr. C. seems here, however, to allow, that “the times of “the Gentiles” may mean the times, ‘when all of them shall ‘worship the true God.’ (l. 26.) This, however, he afterwards disallows, ‘Secondly, that all the Gentiles will not ‘worship the true God even to the last day.’ (P. 66. last line but one.)

L. 29. ‘His coming was of no use, &c.’ This assertion gives occasion to a very important enquiry;—namely,

WHAT HAVE BEEN THE EFFECTS OF THE COMING OF JESUS CHRIST ON THE STATE OF THE WORLD, INCLUDING BOTH ISRAEL AND THE GENTILES?

Mr. C. repeatedly asks the question, ‘Of what use was ‘the coming of Christ?’ He here says, ‘His coming was ‘of no use, and therefore he could not be the Messiah.’ And he subjoins, that his having taught multitudes ‘the true worship’ (which is supposing it to be ‘the true worship’) is ‘a poor defence, and without foundation:’ because Mohammed ‘established a new religion, &c.’ as if the true worship, and a new religion were equivalent!—We, erring, sinful, and self-flattering mortals, are wholly incompetent judges of the plans, counsels, and purposes, of the infinite, eternal, and only wise God. To this day, some parts even of the structure of the human body remain so little understood, that the most skillful anatomists differ in opinion, as to the functions performed by them: and some have been tempted to enquire, ‘Of what use are they?’ Yet God hath created them. If then we are so incompetent to understand the plan of God, in respect of our own bodies; how presumptuous must it be, to reject any part of revealed truth; because we do not see the use of it! or rashly pronounce it useless! I would recommend to all who venture on this kind of language, to consider well the texts referred to below.* I might easily enlarge, but let this hint suffice. It is manifest, that many things exist, as the work of the Creator, of which we cannot perceive the usefulness: and events occur, which, we might previously have supposed, would have been prevented. The very existence of sin and misery, which God, infinite in wisdom and power and goodness, could have prevented, yet did not; is one grand instance, equally conclusive to persons of every creed and nation; that man’s reasonings and imaginations are in no degree the measure, or standard, of the works and ways of God.†

* Zeph. iii. 9. † Zeph. ii. 11. ‡ Mal. i. 11.

The question, however, as it relates to the effects of the coming of Jesus Christ, admits of a satisfactory answer.—When Jesus was born at Bethlehem, the state of the Jews was extremely corrupt, according to the testimony of their own historian, Josephus; and was daily becoming more and more so. This might easily be proved in various ways; but I question, whether the Jews themselves, considering subsequent events, will be disposed to deny it.

The nations of the earth were generally sunk in gross idolatry, sensuality, and every species of enormous wickedness. The speculations of the few, who called themselves philosophers, terminated chiefly in a sort of practical Atheism:

* Job. xxvi. 14. xxviii. 28. xl. 8. Psalm cxxxix. 6. Isaiah xl. 13, 14.

† Prov. iii. 5—7. Isaiah v. 21.

and even their moral discussions had little effect, either on their own conduct, or that of other men. It would, indeed, be no laborious task, to prove from their own writers, that the apostle has by no means overcharged the picture of the gentile world, in the first chapter of ROMANS. Now there can be no doubt, that great numbers of the Jews were awakened from their formal and vicious lethargy, by the ministry of John Baptist, our Lord's forerunner, and by the preaching of Jesus and his apostles. Soon after the crucifixion of Jesus, several thousand Jews became his disciples, and, according to records, which no adversary ever ventured to accuse of falsehood, led most holy, harmless, and benevolent lives; and even "a great company (πολυς οχλος) of the priests became "obedient to the faith."*

Persecution, however, soon drove great numbers of the converted Jews into distant lands; but wherever they went, they made known the gospel to their countrymen, and in every place a remnant embraced it. These, in general, "walked in "the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost." Probably, at the time of Saul's conversion, there were ten times, perhaps a hundred times, more sober, righteous, and godly persons, among the Jews, than there were at the beginning of John Baptist's ministry; and immense numbers were added to them, before the desolations of Jerusalem. These were only "a remnant" compared with the whole nation: yet there can be little doubt, that this remnant amounted at least to the 144,000, seen by John in vision, sealed from the twelve tribes of Israel.† And was the turning of so many tens of thousands of formal Israelites, with their families, to the Lord their God, and bringing them into the way of peace and salvation, 'Of no use,' because the Jews as a nation rejected the Messiah?

Soon, however, the ministers of Jesus preached to the

* Acts vi. 7.

† Rev. vii. 4-6.

Gentiles also, “that men should repent and turn to God, and “do works meet for repentance:” and in a short time vast multitudes “turned to God from idols, to serve the living “and the true God;” (p. 15. l. 26;) whose pious, holy, and useful lives, rendered them as “lights” among their heathen neighbours. And, not to be prolix, the sacred leaven of the Christian doctrine, diffused its influence so rapidly among the nations, notwithstanding fierce and bloody persecution, that Christians abounded in all parts of the Roman empire: they soon were found in all their cities, and even in their courts and camps; millions were doubtless thus converted to ‘the true worship’ and a holy life; and at length, in about 300 years, Christianity became the established religion of all the nations, which had formed the idolatrous Roman empire: and it continues to be so, even to this day, in most parts of it; besides its extension far beyond the utmost boundaries of that empire, to the east and west, and north and south.

There always, indeed, have been far more nominal Christians, than real ones; as well as far more Jews and Israelites, than genuine children and imitators of Abraham and Israel: but who can deny, that, after every reasonable reduction has been made, immense multitudes have become in all successive generations, the spiritual worshippers and servants of God, “they and their children with them?” Will even a Jew deny, that everlasting salvation was the consequence of this conversion from idolatry and wickedness, to God and holiness? If he do, let him state the grounds on which he denies it. And is the everlasting salvation of millions of no use? Is the introduction of so many hundreds of thousands, nay, millions, of families, into the company of the true worshippers of God, which in many cases ensures “the oracles “of God” and the means of grace to succeeding generations, of no use?—Even among those, who we fear are only nominal Christians, Christianity has in every way produced most salutary and important effects. It has fixed the standard and tone of morals far higher, than it ever was in the Pagan nations of old, or than it is among modern idolaters. It has terminated gladiatorial shews, the allowed and sanctioned murder of infants, and various other murders, as of slaves, females, and even old persons; with many more cruel and detestable practices and customs: or it has driven them, like wild beasts, into deserts and secret lurking places. Christianity has mitigated the horrors even of war: it is undermining slavery and mitigating its horrors: Christianity alone has built hospitals, and provided asylums for the aged and destitute. We might easily enlarge, but a hint must here suffice. Mr. C. allows, that the Jews receive better treatment in this country than in others: but he is not perhaps aware, that this is the effect of the superior knowledge of Christian principles and duties, which prevails in this favoured land, more than in most others in the world. Were these still more fully understood and practised; the Jews would meet with proportionably a more candid, equitable, and benevolent treatment, from the inhabitants in general; not affected, or as deeming their religious difference from us of subordinate consequence; but as springing from our principles and heart, and as the means of conciliating them to our holy and loving religion. Ere long, I trust that the Jews will more effectually know the use of the coming of Jesus, and of his having been "preached to the Gentiles," by means of such institutions as 'the London Society,' and by the blessing of God, on our endeavours to communicate our holy religion to Israel, and being instrumental to their expected conversion and restoration. In short all the true religion, which has been for successive ages, in the whole world, or which exists at this day on earth, and we trust will soon diffuse its sacred influence among all nations, is the effect of the coming of Christ. If the Jews plead, that their nation, or part of it, is at least an exception; without examining the validity of the plea, it must be allowed to be a solitary exception, and comprises a very small portion indeed of the whole human species.—But the meaning of Mr. C's. question and objection is evident: he judges nothing of use, so long as his own nation is excluded from the desired dominion over other nations. In every other view, the advantages of Christianity to mankind, even as to morals and temporal good, have been incalculable; and millions, yea, probably hundreds of millions, have through it obtained “salvation with eternal glory.” Surely, then, Mr. C.'s objection is satisfactorily answered.

P. 16. last line. ‘A man arose called Mohammed, &c.’ Leaving the consideration of several things advanced on this topick, till afterwards, I will here take occasion to investigate a subject of the highest importance in the controversy:—namely,—

THE TRIUMPHS OF JESUS, AS COMPARED, AND CONTRASTED, WITH THOSE OF MOHAMMED.

I am not competent to decide, whether ‘Mohammed has now many more followers than Christ.’ (p. 17. l. 2.) Mohammed has comparatively but few followers in Europe, probably none in America. We know very little of the interior of Africa; but it is likely, that continent has far more Mahomedan than Christian inhabitants. China, Japan, and many of the northern parts of Asia, contain few either Christians or Mohammedans. But, however that may be, the followers of Mohammed are doubtless very numerous; and the success of that impostor has been exceedingly extensive and permanent. But three things should be considered, in comparing his success with that of Jesus. 1. The state of those regions, in which the success of each was at the first obtained. 2. The nature of the religion, which each propagated: and 3. The means, by which the triumphs of each were acquired.

1. The state of those regions, in which the success of each was at the first obtained.

When our Lord entered on his ministry in Judea and Galilee, the inhabitants, though hypocritical, or immoral, to a very great degree, were not illiterate or uncivilized. Most of them could read, and were acquainted with the Old Testament, and there were many learned scribes among them. They were also extremely attached to the forms of religion, and to "the traditions of the elders," on the knowledge of which they highly valued themselves.

The Gentiles also, among whom the most signal and illustrious triumphs of Christianity were obtained, constituted in many respects the most civilized and learned part of the known world, as known at that time: and the gospel began its course, when learning was but little declined from its highest celebrity, immediately after the Augustan age. The Greeks and Romans, who called the rest of the world barbarians, were the very people, among whom the gospel obtained a vast proportion of its success, both at first and in subsequent ages. In the Roman colonies, and the Grecian cities, in Egypt and the northern coast of Africa, in Syria, Asia Minor, Macedonia, Greece, and even Rome itself; the first Christian churches, out of Judea, were planted. In the heart of those renowned countries, not only addicted in a most haughty manner to their own customs and superstitions, and despising others, especially the Jews: but also comprising almost all the learning, which was then known in the world; Christianity, preached by converted Jews, acquired such a firm establishment, as to undermine both pagan idolatry and pagan philosophy, and to erect her throne on their ruins; and the effects continue to this day. This was accomplished, amidst the persecuting rage and cruelty of the Roman Emperors and other princes; and amidst the scorn and vain reasoning of the philosophers, of every sect and name!

No doubt Christianity triumphed also, in uncivilized and illiterate regions; and at an early period it was established in Britain; then the abode of rude and almost naked savages. But a veil seems purposely to have been cast over the history of Christianity in other parts of the world: and its triumphs in the seats of civilization, learning, philosophy, and authority, are almost exclusively recorded, at least in an authentick and satisfactory manner. Christianity scorned, so to speak, to shrink from the most acute and adequate investigation, or to take any advantage of men's ignorance and incapacity: it challenged the closest examination from all those, who were most competent to detect the fallacy, if there were any, and to judge of its claims. It challenged, I say, this examination: it stood the test, and it triumphed over every opponent, through succeeding generations; and it has triumphed over all to this very day!

Mohammed, on the contrary, arose among the Arabs, who, (except in a kind of astronomy, not much better than astrology), were extremely illiterate, as he himself also was. The time of his appearing coincided, not only with the deep corruption of Christianity, in various ways, but especially by the idolatrous worship of images, of saints, and angels; but also with a term in the annals of history, marked by the decay, and almost extinction, of literature; and only to be exceeded in ignorance, by the dreary ages which followed. The western empire had been subverted by the irruptions of the northern barbarians and others: and the eastern was so divided and enfeebled, that it was capable of making very feeble resistance. Even the Persian empire was enfeebled almost to helplessness. The eastern church, also, was torn in pieces by fierce contests, as well as corrupted by pestilent heresies and superstitions.

It is evident, that Mohammed by the teaching of some Jews, or, as others think, of a Nestorian Monk, had acquired a confused knowledge of the Old Testament, and a superficial acquaintance with Christianity: and, taking advantage of the divided and corrupt state of the church, which had widely deviated from the scriptures, he professed to be the apostle of God, to rectify and perfect both the religion of Jesus, and that of the Jews, and to establish the religion of 'Abraham the orthodox,' THE HALTER, so the Arabick word signifies. Abraham, says he, was not a Christian, not associating any with God in worship; not a Jew, as not observing the Jewish ceremonies: but he halted between both, and so was orthodox. His plausible pretences, in this respect, among those, who just knew enough to see that the worship of images and of created beings, was idolatrous; but were too ignorant to discriminate on other matters with any accuracy; concurring with various other circumstances, gave him at length, and after many delays, considerable success among those of his own nation, and in the countries, which had formed the eastern empire and the Greek church; where the most deplorable ignorance prevailed, not only among the laity, but even among the clergy and bishops. In after times indeed his successors and followers cultivated learning; and, (which was easily effected,) added superiority in science, to the victorious power of their arms. Thus their triumphs were extended more and more widely; in Asia, Africa, and many parts of Europe: and the Turks, or Othmans, succeeding to the Saracens, the successes of Mohammedism continue to this day. But neither at first, nor afterwards, were they required, to exhibit their religion and its evidences, amidst keen, sagacious, learned, and philosophical opponents, possessed of superior rank and authority, and able to excite the arm of persecution, in aid of their exertions and reasonings, against the detested innovators; as the case had been, with those by whom Christianity was propagated. The triumphs of Mohammedism were in dark and illiterate ages, and in the dark and illiterate regions, of the world : and, however it may have been in Africa and the east, the revival of learning, and the spirit of acute investigation, which accompanied the reformation of Luther and his coadjutors, stayed the progress of Mohammedism; in all countries to which the influence of that revolution in learning and publick opinion extended, and terminated its triumphs ; nay, reduced its dominion within more narrow limits. This leads us to consider,

2. The nature of that religion, which each of them, (Jesus and Mohammed,) propagated.

The religion of Mohammed, as far as doctrinal points are concerned, resembled in many respects that of modern Socinians or Unitarians, as they very improperly and unfairly call themselves. His great zeal was manifested against ASSOCIATORS; or those who joined idols, or creatures, or Jesus Christ, or the Holy Spirit, with God in religious worship ; whom he condemns and anathematizes, and threatens with hell-fire, almost in every chapter of the Koran, and often repeatedly in the same chapter. He argued almost exactly in the same manner, against the idea of God's having a Son, as Mr. C. does. He attempted to divest Christianity, not only of its corruptions, but also of its mysteries; especially "the great Mystery of Godliness, God manifest in the flesh:" and how palatable this is to the pride of self-wise man, we well know. "The offence of the cross," the doctrine of the atonement, and all ideas of redemption, are excluded from his system; along with that of regeneration, and a new creation unto holiness. Consequently the doctrines of original sin, man's depravity as a fallen creature, his universal exposedness to the wrath of God, and his need of gratuitous mercy and salvation; do not at all occur to affront the self-righteous and self-confident pride of the human heart.

In one particular indeed Mohammed wholly differed from modern Socinians; viz. that a state of future and eternal punishment is a prominent part of his system: but this, as he managed it, exceedingly forwarded his success among rude and ignorant barbarians and half Christians: for none but infidels, and associators, and apostates from his religion, were exposed to it. All, who believed in God and in his prophet Mohammed, and paid a kind of quit-rent of prayers, alms, and pilgrimages, without regard to the holiness or unholiness of their general conduct, were secured against this tremendous doom. A sort of purgatory was declared for such believers as were not wholly prepared for paradise, or deserving of it: and all zealous believers, especially such as fought for the faith, were secure of immediate admission into his sensual heaven. ‘The sword,’ says Mohammed, ‘is the key of heaven and hell, a drop of blood shed in the cause of God, a night spent in arms, is of more avail than two months of fasting and prayer. Whoever dies in battle, his sins are forgiven; and at the day of judgment, his wounds shall be resplendent as vermilion, and odoriferous as musk: and the loss of his limbs shall be supplied by the wings of angels.’ I apprehend, that numbers of nominal Christians would feel much less aversion to the doctrine of future and eternal punishments, if thus limited and explained, with reference to the external profession of Christianity, and attachment to it. Besides the dread of so dire a destruction for themselves, and relatives, and connections, from which men shrink back; the idea that they are deserving of it for their rebellion against God, excessively tends to set them against it.

The doctrine of human merit, in general, and of works of supererogation in particular, were inculcated by Mohammed. ‘The two mountains, Sapha and Merva, are monuments of the sacred things of God. He, therefore, who shall go on pilgrimage to the house of God, and shall visit it, there shall ‘be no guilt upon him, if he surround them: and he who performs any good work, of his own accord, truly God will be grateful.’ Koran ch. 2. تطوع 5 Conj. طاع Suo libitu, et sponte, citra legis necessitatem aut dictamen boni quid fecit, deditve. Golius. ‘Of his own accord, beyond the necessity or dictating of the law, shall give or do any good thing.’ Especially every exertion, contribution, or risk, by which the faith of Mohammed could be propagated, was not only meritorious, but entitled a man to indulgences and extra rewards.

It is generally said, that Mohammed held predestination: and this is in some sense true; but his sentiments on that subject neither fully accorded with heathen fatalism, nor with Christian predestination. Different from the heathens, he supposes, what we may call the fatality of events, to originate entirely from the decree of God: yet he by no means speaks of it, as the result of infinite wisdom, justice, goodness, and truth, fore-knowing and fore-appointing every thing in the best manner possible, for the display of his own glory, and the highest good of all obedient creatures, and of all the redeemed, and in general of his universal and eternal kingdom. He had just enough of that persuasion, that all events are decreed and must come to pass, which operated on his soldiers, in the very same manner, as notions of lucky and fortunate, do among our soldiers and sailors, to make them confident and fearless in every danger: but, in respect of human actions, he seems to make God the author alike of the good and of the evil.

Stated prayers, giving alms, chiefly a proportion of spoils taken in war, or of other gains, which Mohammed required as an oblation to God; fastings, for which very convenient and accommodating compensations are appointed, and pilgrimages, but especially ‘fighting in the path of God,’ form the substance of his practical religion. His moral precepts are very thinly scattered in the Koran, and very vaguely expressed; and with much allowance to believers, even as much as the carnal heart can well desire. The “holy, just, good, and spiritual law” of God, is as much left out, or thrown into the back ground, as the doctrines of redemption are. As much indulgence to the sensual passion, in respect of polygamy, and the concubinage of females taken in war, is granted, as human nature can wish for. It would be an outrage to common decency to quote the Koran on this subject; and still more its Mohammedan commentators, who generally make the text itself appear more filthy by their glosses, than it really is. All limitations, except men could not bear the expence, were merely nominal: a limited number of wives was connected with concubinage, in most cases; while Mohammed’s own example greatly exceeded in licentiousness, the laws, however indulgent, which he prescribed to others.

He indeed, in some places, forbids the use of wine, but in others he seems to allow of it; or to consider the use of it only as unfavourable to his political designs: for delicious wines form one of the gratifications of his paradise. Not the least restraint was placed by his religion on pride, ambition, avarice, rapacity, or the malignant passions: nay, the whole of his system tended greatly to nourish and encourage them.—Here then was every thing congenial to depraved nature; every thing gratifying to one or other of the corrupt passions. Even paganism, at least the system of pagan moralists and philosophers, required far more self-denial, and fixed a far higher standard of morals, than Mahomedism does. To crown the whole, it proposed to the hopes of its votaries, a heaven of perpetual enjoyment of the most exquisite sensual delights, which the most voluptuous imagination could conceive, or heart desire:—“They will feed on the most delicious fruits, be clothed in the most splendid silken garments, refreshed with rivers of water, wine, milk, and honey, entertained with the ‘most delightful musick, and the ravishing girls of paradise, with black eyes, the enjoyment of whose company will be a principal felicity of the faithful.’

Mohammed is by many supposed to have maintained, that women had no souls. This, however, does not appear to be well-grounded: but as a new creation of most beautiful women, to continue for ever in youth and vigour, formed on purpose for the gratification of the faithful, was a most essential part of his heaven; it is plain that the women who were of his religion in this world could not well share the same felicity: yet he repeatedly speaks of believing women being admitted to paradise. Women, in his hateful system, were considered, as almost exclusively, the objects of men’s sensual indulgence; and were in other respects of so little consequence, and he was so little concerned to excite them, (who were in general the most abject slaves of the men,) to exertion in his cause; that he seems almost to have overlooked them in his views of a future world.

One further particular appears to belong to this part of the subject. The followers of Mohammed were fully entitled to all the spoil and captives taken from the vanquished, paying a small tax to him out of it: while the inhabitants of the countries among whom they went, had only the option of embracing the religion of the conquerors, and sharing their privileges, or of being either slain or made slaves. This excessively facilitated their success, when once begun: and though political wisdom afterwards, especially as to the Christians, modified this condition, yet the spirit of it prevailed to a very great degree. From this view of the religion of Mohammed, it is evident to all, who know human nature, and what suits the market, or coincides with the desires and imagined wants of men, that it was admirably adapted for the purpose. It had nothing, in the general constitution of fallen human nature, to oppose it, and much, very much to recommend it. The powers of darkness had no interest in exciting opposition to it, but the contrary. Local prejudices, customs, and superstitions, with personal interests, formed a temporal obstruction. So would learning and philosophy also, had any been found in those dark times and regions; and the authority of princes; if any had been powerful enough to resist the torrent, but none were. Mohammed accordingly found difficulty, great difficulty, at first, in putting his machine in motion: but that once effected, there needed no immediate divine interposition to give it efficacy; no, not even what Mr. C. calls 'good fortune:' an immediate divine interposition was as requisite to arrest and stop its progress, as to stop that of a tremendous conflagration, or of an impetuous torrent.

Having obtained a full establishment, the same causes added to its entire and inseparable union with the politicks and government of Mohammed's successors, and other princes of that religion, have prolonged its prevalence, in ignorant and despotick countries; and probably will do so, till the light of pure Christianity expose the whole to neglect and disgrace.

Few words may suffice for the contrast of the holy religion of Jesus, with the unholy system which we have delineated. The perfect law of "loving God with all the heart, and mind, and soul, and strength," and of "loving our neighbour as ourselves," explained, and applied to every circumstance and relation of human life. Man is uniformly considered, as a sinner deserving the wrath of God for his violations of this holy law; and by his proneness, arising from the carnal mind, to refuse subjection to it, he is represented as "a vessel of wrath, fitted for destruction;" inheriting fallen Adam's rebellious and apostate nature, and ready to imitate his disobedience. To him, in this ruined and wretched state, the most full, and suitable, and gracious, proposals of mercy, reconciliation, and recovery to holiness are made: but in such a way, as never for a moment suffers him to lose sight of the dreadful and hateful nature of sin, and his just desert of final wrath and misery: and, in this proposal, through the righteousness and redemption, and intercession of Immanuel, “God manifested “in the flesh;” the holy law is more especially honoured, both in its precept and in its awful sanction. Every doctrine of Christianity is diametrically opposite, nay, designedly opposed, to man’s pride of self-wisdom, self-righteousness, self-confidence, and self-will. He must, in order to be saved, “become a fool, that he may be made wise;” and “receive “the kingdom of God,” not as a reasoning philosopher, but “as a little child.”—He must seek mercy, as a self-condemned criminal, “submitting to the righteousness of God,” and renouncing his own righteousness. He must come even “to “the throne of grace,” not in his own name, but in the name of his faithful and merciful High Priest; and seek forgiveness and grace, not for his own sake, or for the sake of any thing, which he has done or can do; but for the sake of the righteousness and atonement of his heavenly Advocate, and “through faith in his name:” nay, even “the spiritual sacrifices “of praise and thanksgiving,” are only “acceptable, through “Jesus Christ.”* This repentance, and faith, and grace, and “things accompanying salvation,” are all to be considered as “the gift of God;” and the whole glory given to him. His restoration to holiness, his moral capacity of serving God acceptably in this world, and enjoying his love in heaven, must be effected by “a new creation.”—“We are his work“manship created in Christ Jesus unto good works.” Self-dependence and self-glorying, in every thing, are systematically and most carefully excluded. Every difference is ascribed to the grace of God. Even while we are called “to work “out our own salvation with fear and trembling;” we are reminded, that "it is God who worketh in us to will and "to do of his good pleasure." Every thing is suited to give offence to all, except "the poor in spirit," and the humble in heart. Yet not the least allowance is given to any one of our corrupt inclinations. The mortification of those passions, which among men are in high estimation, is as absolutely required, as that of the most grovelling sensuality. Ambition and the love of human applause, and emulation of excelling others, and desire of power and pre-eminence, are even more decidedly proscribed, than drunkenness and licentiousness. "God resisteth the proud;" (ὁπρηνῶν οὐκ ἀνίστασεται.) Christianity, again, makes no exceptions, in her impartial and holy requirements, in favour of the wealthy, the powerful, and the noble; no, not of kings and emperors: and so far from making more allowance to the zealous professors of her holy truths than to others, she considers sin in them as far more heinous, than in "those who know not God;" and denounces a doom on wicked professors of the gospel, more intolerable at the day of judgment, than even that of Sodom. No zeal, or labours, or endowments, though a man should "speak with the tongues of men and of angels," and should "give his body to be burned," after having preached as long and as successfully as the apostle Paul himself, is allowed as a compensation for "working iniquity:" and after all, if the preacher, or martyr, hath not "kept under his "body, and brought it into subjection," (what a contrast to Mohammedan licentiousness!) he himself will be "a cast-away."—

* Phil. i. 11. Col. iii. 17. Heb. xiii. 15, 16. 1 Pet. ii. 4, 5.

At the same time, the heaven proposed by Christianity, is one of perfect purity and holy love: a heaven of perfect conformity to God, and constant delight in him, and in his worship and service. Such a heaven, as no unholy man could endure. "Without holiness, no man shall see the Lord." In order to be "made meet for this inheritance of the saints

“in light,” from which the most honourable and lawful of our earthly comforts and satisfactions are excluded; “the flesh must be crucified with its affections and lusts;” the right hand, which causes to offend, must be cut off; and even our most lawful attachments and inclinations must be habitually subjected to the holy will of God. As to this world, nothing is set before us, but the prospect of self-denial and tribulation; except such supports and comforts, as come from God alone, and consist principally in the hopes and earnestness of heavenly glory and felicity. Food and raiment, with a contented mind, is the whole of that which is expressly promised. Instead of being allured, like Mohammed’s followers, by the hope of plunder, or power, of wealth and sensual pleasure; we are called on to “deny ourselves, and take up our cross,” and follow our suffering Saviour, forsaking all and prepared to “lay down our lives for his sake.”

Were all men consistent Mohammedans, all would be sensual, selfish, ambitious, deceitful, malignant, “having a form of godliness, but denying the power of it.” Were all men consistent Christians; all would be piety, purity, humility, integrity, disinterested, liberal, self-denying love. The earth would be full of happiness, approximating to that of heaven, and preparing for it: and, without any effort to induce them, men would every where, “beat their swords into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, and would learn war no more.”

But our divine religion wants a more able panegyrist; not as panegyrists in general, to ascribe to her undeserved honours, but to do her justice in any tolerable measure. This, however, may suffice to shew, that in such a world as this, a religion, which declared war against all vices, and all the proud virtues, all the ignorance and delusion, all the “science falsely so called,” all the irreligion, and all the religion, of the whole world; which attempted not, like heathen moralists, to rule by balancing parties, and to prevail against grovelling vices, by sanctioning ambition and love of glory; but proscribed all, without exception: I say, that such a religion should become triumphant to the degree and extent, and in that durable manner, which it undeniably has; is an event unprecedented and astonishing, and which never could, in the prospect, have been imagined, except by those, who considered the power of Almighty God as engaged to render it successful. This may introduce the third part of our subject,

3. The means, by which the triumphs of Christianity, and those of Mohammedism were acquired.

The apostle might well say, "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of strong holds; casting down imaginations, and every high thing, that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity, every thought to the obedience of Christ."* Jesus himself appeared as a poor man, "not having where to lay his head:" having been educated, not in the schools of learning, but in the cottage, nay the carpenter's shop of Joseph; without wealthy or powerful connexions; and despised and opposed by all those who possessed learning, authority, rank, or influence, and those who were invested with the priestly character. He chose his immediate followers, and the ministers of his spiritual kingdom, the commanders in this holy warfare, from the fisher-boats of Galilee, or the receipt of custom. He paid no court to the great and noble, but "preached the gospel to the poor;" which was an additional reason of the opposition of the Jewish rulers to his claims, and continues to be so to this day. "He went about doing good," in the midst of all kind of opposition, contempt, reproach, and con-tradition : and when his numerous and stupendous miracles so affected the common people, that they wanted to make him a King, and to enlist under his banners, as a temporal leader ; he decidedly resisted or evaded their attempts. Having spent some years, in constantly preaching the word of life : exhibiting all the time a spotless example, performing innumerable miracles of mercy, patiently suffering all hardships and injuries, and employing his hours of retirement in fervent devotion ; he was at last, “ led as a lamb to the slaughter ;” nailed to the cross, as a deceiver and blasphemer ; and expired, amidst the cruel insults of rulers and people, the Jews and gentiles.

At this crisis, his cause appeared hopeless, and his followers almost despaired. But, behold ! in less than two months after his crucifixion, his apostles, unarmed, unlettered, and obscure men, began boldly to preach the crucified Jesus as the Messiah, the Saviour, and Judge of the world, “ the Lord of glory” and the “ Prince of life :” charging the rulers of the Jews with having wickedly murdered him ; attesting his resurrection from the dead, and ascension into heaven ; and calling on all to believe in him, as they would escape the wrath of God and obtain salvation ; and appealing to the ancient prophets, that “ thus it was written and thus it must be.”

In this most perilous, and apparently hopeless service, which could not but give intolerable offence to all the rulers, and priests, and teachers, who had condemned Jesus ; they had not the least protection, except from the power of God ; and as the miracles which they wrought, combined with their dignified and mild courage, to overcome their superiors, and impress favourably the multitude. They, however, stood their ground ; and did not so much as flee from Jerusalem, or shrink from the most publick testimony, after repeated imprisonments. It would be tedious to enter into a further detail. They engaged in what must have appeared to the wise men of this world, a desperate attempt. They undertook, (going forth in the strength "of JEHOVAH, and proclaiming his "righteousness,") to prevail against all the vice and proud virtue, the religion and irreligion, the ignorance, and learning, and philosophy of the whole world; and all the rooted habits and customs, and interests of every nation; with no other weapons than faithful, argumentative, persuasive preaching; holy and exemplary lives; fervent prayers; patient and constant sufferings, even unto death; and miracles of mercy and beneficence. If the reader would see a masterly delineation of their ministry, let him carefully consider the apostle's description of his own conduct. "Giving no offence in any "thing, that the ministry be not blamed: but in all things "approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much "patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, "in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in "fastings; by pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by "kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned: by the "word of truth, by the power of God, by the armour of "righteousness on the right hand and on the left: through "honour and dishonour; through evil report and good report: as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet "well known; as dying, yet behold, we live; as chastened, "but not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, "yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."*

To preach, as the Saviour and Judge of the world, and the Lord of all, the very person, whom Pontius Pilate, by the earnest request of the Jewish rulers, priests, scribes, and people, had crucified between two robbers; to preach this, in an enlightened age, and among the most enlightened nations; to preach this successfully and triumphantly: for such men as the apostles were, to accomplish this, to so great a degree

* 2 Cor. vi. 3-10.

as before their death, to fix the foundations of Christianity on so firm a basis, and to prepare the way for such future successes, by far inferior instruments: that Christianity should effect the revolutions which it has effected, and continue and prevail, during so many centuries, amidst such persecutions, and so many internal corruptions and traitors, even to this day, with clear and opening prospects of still greater triumphs: this, I say, is the grand wonder of the world! But it was “not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the LORD of hosts.” Every thing combined to crush Christianity in its infancy and childhood, except as protected and prospered by Omnipotence.—Its triumphs during those ages, when, being exposed to persecution, no weapons but those above described, were used, prepared the way for its subsequent successes. Other weapons, which were afterwards adopted, if they seemed to effect any thing, more than counterbalanced it, by disgracing the cause. To this day, all the valuable success of Christianity has been, and is effected, by the same weapons, (miracles excepted,) which the apostles, and primitive evangelists employed, and those exclusively. And in the same way, there seems an opening prospect of such increasing success, as shall fulfil the prophecy, of “the Stone cut out of the mountain without hands, becoming a Mountain, and filling the whole earth.”—“When the enemy came in like a flood,” in the late inundation of infidelity and atheism, “the Spirit of God lifted up a standard against him.” The different Societies for promoting the cause of Christianity, are honoured as standard-bearers; but I must consider the British and Foreign Bible Society, as the principal standard-bearer of them all.

Now contrast the means by which Mohammed obtained his triumphs:—

The first step of Mohammed’s emerging from obscurity was his marrying a rich widow, whose affairs he had successfully conducted: and it appears, that when he aspired to the office and honour of a prophet, she was his first disciple; and then some of her relations joined his cause. But he laboured, by preaching, and other methods of that kind, with very discouraging success, for several years; and indeed was exposed to much opposition and persecution, from his idolatrous countrymen. He, at length, however, by paying court to the wealthy, who probably became sensible that his views might be rendered subservient to schemes of rapacity and ambition; of conquest, plunder, and dominion; acquired several powerful associates: and ere long he found himself placed at the head of an army, well appointed, and eager for conflict, victory, and rapine. The very nature of his religion, to those who really credited it, supplied powerful incentives to the carnal mind, to fight resolutely in promoting it: while the abundant acquisitions made by the surviving combatants, most powerfully allured numbers to combine with them. Still, however, almost every chapter in the Koran shews the immense difficulties, which he had to encounter, from his more sceptical followers, because he wrought no miracles in proof of his mission. He is compelled to use evasions, to make vain excuses, and to menace those, who persisted in demanding such divine attestations, with miracles of vengeance. As new difficulties arose, he added new chapters to his book, with a most imposing confidence: and when the new revelation contradicted any of those previously given, he did not scruple to say, that God had changed his mind; in direct contradiction to what has been called his belief of predestination! He also pretended to work miracles: but he very wisely performed them, either entirely in private, or among a few select friends; so that the report of them was the only proof to men in general of his mission. Every delusion was practised; and he seems fully to have entered into the spirit of the maxim, Si populus vult decipi, decipiatur. ‘ After he had made himself master of Medina,

' he assumed in his new revelations, a fiercer and a more sanguinary tone.—He was now commanded to propagate his religion by the sword, to destroy the monuments of idolatry; and, without regarding the sanctity of days or months, to pursue the unbelieving nations of the earth. In the first months of his reign, he practised the lessons of this holy warfare: the martial apostle fought in person at nine battles and sieges; and fifty enterprizes of war were achieved in ten years, by himself and his lieutenants.'—' In the exercise of political government, Mohammed was compelled to abate of the stern rigour of fanaticism, and to comply, in some measure, with the prejudices and passions of his followers, and to employ even the vices of men, as the instruments of their salvation—The use of fraud and perfidy, of cruelty and injustice, were often subservient to the propagation of the faith: and Mohammed commanded and approved the assassination of the Jews and idolaters, who had escaped in the field of battle. By the repetition of such acts, the character of Mohammed must have been gradually stained; and the influence of such pernicious habits, would be poorly compensated by the practice of the personal and social virtues, which are necessary to maintain the reputation of a prophet, among his sectaries and friends. Of his last years, ambition was the ruling passion; and a politician will suspect, that he secretly smiled, (the victorious impostor,) at the enthusiasm of his youth, and the credulity of his followers. In the support of truth, the arts of fraud and fiction, may be deemed less criminal; and he would have started at the foulness of the means, had he not been satisfied of the importance and justice of the end.'—(Gibbon.) The reader will know how to appreciate such a confession, as this from the infidel author of 'The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire;' and how to allow for his base insinuations. Let the reader compare the apostle's words, "As we are slanderously reported,

“and as some affirm that we say, Let us do evil, that good may come; whose damnation is just;”* and learn the principles of our holy religion, so opposite both to the conduct of Mohammed, and the insinuations of Gibbon.

After the death of Mohammed, many most absurd miracles were said to have been wrought by him: but if his successors had used no other “weapons of warfare,” than either his Koran, or his miracles, Mohammedism would soon have expired with its departed founder.

Such a sensual and worldly religion, however, enforced by the sword of numerous, victorious, and disciplined armies, full of enthusiastical devotees of their new faith, had little need of miracles to secure its success among the adjacent nations; considering their enfeebled and distracted state. Indeed, it must have been a most stupendous miracle, which could have arrested its progress: and it is most wonderful, that with such means, and such armies and commanders, it did not, as an overwhelming deluge, spread far more extensively its most destructive effects. But he who said to the ocean, “Hitherto shalt thou go, and no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed,” limited and stopped its progress; exactly at the time, when, and as, it had been predicted by the apostle many ages before.† Since that period, the cause has at least been stationary for some ages: and there are at present (directly contrary to the prospects which Christianity presents, at a far later period of its existence,) many symptoms of its declining influence, and indications of its approaching ruin.

I shall rejoice, if this compendious statement may excite younger, and more learned men, who have access to books, which in my retired situation I have not, to investigate this subject more fully. For, though Christians have hitherto seemed little aware of it: Mohammedism, with the superficial, (that is, with a vast majority of mankind,) is the most

* Rom. iii. 5—8.

† Rev. ix.

specious and dangerous rival of Christianity on earth; and requires far greater study and labour to expose it, than have yet been employed. The most of what has been done, has been done by papists—But,

*Non tali auxilio, non defensoribus istis,
Tempus eget.*

Compare then the state of the nations, as to learning, policy, and religion, in which Christianity triumphed, and in which Mohammedism triumphed; the opposite nature of the holy religion of Jesus, and the unholy imposture of Mohammed; and the means by which each succeeded: and I trust, it must be allowed, that the success of Mohammedism does not afford so much as the shadow of an argument against the divine mission of the holy Jesus.

I believe, I might now leave the whole of what Mr. C. says on this subject, to its doom, as requiring no further answer, (P. 17, 18.) The doctrine of the Trinity, (P. 17. l. 10,) and that of antitrinitarians, cannot be disposed of, or the controversy settled, by such remarks. The Jew laughing at Christians and Turks; (l. 17,) the lawsuit; (l. 18,) the castle, &c; (l. 28,) are surely so stated as to be displeasing even to considerate Jews. It is indeed grievous, that in subjects of infinite importance, men can so egregiously trifle; and divert themselves and one another, in the great concerns of eternal salvation or damnation. In this lawsuit there is no judge; the parties, witnesses, and deciders, are all the same three companies; viz. the Jew, the Turk, and the Christian; and the Jew of course decides in his own behalf. But how will God decide at last? “Do ye think that I will accuse you “to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses “in whom ye trust; For had ye believed Moses, ye would “have believed me; for he wrote of me.”* I trust this will be proved in the course of this work.

* John v. 45, 46

The Christian, indeed, heartily believes, that the law of Moses is "the law of God:" but he distinguishes between, what was introductory to the Messiah's coming, and what is of permanent, nay, eternal, obligation: but the Mohammedan equally allows the truth of Christianity, as of the Mosaick law: he distorts both of them, and endeavours to maintain his system on the ruins of both. Mohammed never attempts to adduce any thing from the Old Testament, but he adds, alters, leaves out part, and pollutes, the rest. Perhaps the power of falsehood in marring the beauty, purity, and simplicity of scriptural narrative, does not appear more striking in Hesiod's dreams about Pandora's box, than in Mohammed's history of Joseph.

In fact, of all the books, which I ever attempted to read, the Koran contains the fewest ideas, and the most wearying sameness. I suppose, they who, fully understanding Arabick, read it as, in some respects, a living language, find the periods and cadences sonorous and pompous. But it is the dullest book I ever opened: and I turn from it with a sort of anticipated satisfaction, not only to the sacred scriptures, or to the writings of Christians, or to heathen moralists; but even to the entertaining and ingenious fictions and trifles of the Latin and Greek poets.

P. 18. l. 4. 'Good fortune attended both.' What is the meaning of 'good fortune,' in the vocabulary of a Jew or a Christian? I read nothing of it, either in the original scriptures, or in our translation of them. In our Prayer-book translation of the Psalms, 'good luck' thrice occurs: and it would be an improvement, if it were changed for some other term; but as it is 'good luck in the name of the LORD,' it does not lead us to erroneous sentiments.—The heathen considered Fortune as a sort of independent goddess, in some respects superior to their other gods; and they built temples and altars, and offered sacrifices, to her:—and the clause 'good fortune

‘attended them both,’ savours of the same heathenism. It has been seen, how God made Christianity successful: but as to Mohammed’s success, we may write as one did under Pope Adrian’s inscription—‘Hic Deus nihil fecit:’ indeed the same reprehension is far more justly due to all Mr. C.’s language in this passage—Moses, Jesus, Mohammed: Jew, Christian, Turk, begin, continue, and end the whole; as if altogether independent of God, who is not at all mentioned, except as the law of Moses is called ‘the law of God.’ But this is not the worst. What shall we say to such language as this? ‘If Moses should one day come to visit his castle, he would be surprised to find two castles built on the top of his: and in a great rage, he would command one of his tempests, saying, ‘go ye and pluck them both off, and cast them away, and let me see no more of them.’ How different the language of prophecy! “Thus saith the LORD God; I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury, and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hail-stones in my fury to consume it. So will I break down the wall that ye have builded with untempered mortar,” &c.* Are the tempests then at the command of Moses? Are they his tempests? Surely this language is as contrary to the Old Testament as to the New. Let us at least, in pleading our several causes, not forget, that “the LORD reigneth.”—Mr. C. makes the word Turk to mean the same as Mohammedan: (P. 17. l. 2,) but Turk is the name of a nation, not a religion. Probably, the Turks in general are Mohammedans: but the Mohammedans in Persia, the East Indies, and the interior of Africa, are not Turks.

P. 18. l. 13. ‘The castle of Moses, &c.’—What says Jeremiah on this subject? “Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will make a new covenant with the house

* Ez. xiii. 10—16. Job xxxviii. 22—25. Ps. cvii. 25. Jer. x. 13. Jon. i. 4.

“ of Israel, and with the house of Judah. Not according to “ the covenant which I made with their fathers, when I “ took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of “ Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an “ Husband unto them, saith the LORD. And this shall be “ the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel, after “ those days, saith the LORD, I will put my law in their “ hearts, and write it in their inward parts; and I will be “ their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall “ teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man
 “ his brother, saying, Know ye the LORD: for they shall all “ know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, “ saith the LORD; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I “ will remember their sin no more.” Was not the apostle warranted by this prediction to say, “ In that he saith, a “ new covenant, he hath made the first old; now that which “ decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away?”*
 Even the letter and form of the law of Moses, as it relates to ritual observances, has, not only in its most important requirements been rendered impracticable, ever since the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, that is for above seventeen hundred years; but it has also been disregarded in many things practicable, by the Jews in their dispersions.

P. IS. I. 14. ‘ It was ordained, &c.’ The Messiah is predicted by Daniel, as coming under the fourth kingdom, made known by Nebuchadnezzar’s dream:† but his coming was predicted under the emblem of “ a Stone cut out without hands;” evidently intimating the feeble beginnings of his kingdom; being of the same import with the parables of the grain of mustard-seed, and of the leaven, by which Jesus Christ predicted the nature and progress of his gospel.‡ Its original was small, and its success gradual, and at first unob-

* Jer. xxxi. 31—34 Heb. viii. 8—13. † Dan. ii. 34, 35, 44, 45.

‡ Matt. xiii. 31—33.

served by the rulers of the world : it proceeded without any human help, or power, and amidst great opposition from man. The coming of the Messiah must indeed be under the fourth kingdom; and so was the coming of Jesus: but it is, his final success, when “the Stone cut out without hands, became “a great Mountain, and filled the whole earth,” which is predicted, as taking place when the fourth kingdom was divided into ten kingdoms. There is no intimation that the Messiah should not come till that time: on the contrary the same prophet predicted, that he should come before the desolations of Jerusalem.*—“Of the increase of his government and peace “there shall be no end,” says Isaiah.† Jesus came when the fourth kingdom had attained to its height of power and dominion: and by the influence of his gospel, and those “weapons of warfare,” which have been described, he undermined and subverted the pagan idolatrous power of Rome; and its temporal dominion at length was enfeebled, till ten kingdoms were formed from the ruins of that unwieldy fabrick; the legs and thighs of iron terminated in the ten toes of the image; and in this form, “the Stone cut out without hands “shall smite the image,” and fully dissipate it as chaff, and “shall become a great Mountain and fill the whole earth.” This remains to be fulfilled; but it is connected with the last victories, and largest increase of the kingdom, of the Messiah, and not with his first coming, and his feeble beginnings. Indeed nothing in the whole prophecy is at all spoken concerning the coming of the Messiah; but merely about the fifth kingdom, and its final prevalence, and its “filling the “whole earth.”

P. 18. l. 23. ‘IS THE MESSIAH TO COME TWICE?’ Christians do not suppose that the Messiah will come twice, in that sense in which Mr. C. seems to propose the question: or, a second time, until he shall come in glory to judge the world. But in that sense, in which it has been shewed, that he came in the early times of the gospel, to set up his kingdom, to rescue his persecuted church, and to take vengeance on his crucifiers, by destroying Jerusalem and the temple, and inflicting the most tremendous judgments on the Jews: even by the power of his Providence, and by the sacred influence of his holy Spirit. He will also come again ere long, to dissipate all the remains of the Roman, antichristian, persecuting empire, and “to fill the earth with his glory.” He came once “as a Child born, as a Son given;” “as a Root out of a dry ground, without form or comeliness, or any beauty that men should desire him:”* but he shall come again gloriously, as Lord of all, as “King of kings and Lord of lords,” to take to himself the kingdom over all the earth.

* Dan. ix. 24—27.

† Is. ix. 7.

Some Christians indeed expect his personal appearance and reign on earth: but this seems, to me at least, not capable of proof, either from the Old Testament or the New: and the first verses of the sixty-third chapter of Isaiah, clearly predict his coming as a Conqueror, to destroy his enemies, and rescue his people; indeed as clearly as any part of the New Testament.

Thus Daniel also says, “I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days; and there was given to him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.”† “The Son of man,” is here spoken of, not as coming from heaven to earth, to receive this kingdom; much less as born on earth, and coming as “a Child born, and a Son given;” but as ascending from the earth, into the presence of “the

* Is. ix. 6, 7. liii. 1, 2.

† Dan. vii. 13, 14.

“Ancient of days,” and receiving from him this kingdom. This then, however interpreted, must be distinct from his first coming, as “a Child born.” ‘Though the immediate Ruler of this kingdom be called “the Son of man:” yet it is obvious, that there is something amazing in the prophetic description of the high honour and glory that is given to him. There is at least some difficulty in conceiving, how such everlasting glory and dominion should belong to any one, who should be no more than man, or a mere creature: and particularly in conceiving how such magnificent things should be ascribed to one, who was no more than “the Son of man,” by the prophets who inculcated so strongly and justly, that all mere creatures, are before God, as nothing, and less than nothing.’—(Maclaurin.)

If Christians have formed expectations, which the scripture does not warrant, that may be shewn: but the coming of Christ has been so unanswerably proved to be predicted, as an event preceding the destruction of the temple by the Romans, and the dispersion of the Jews: that no misapprehension of that kind can affect the main question.

Was the “little Stone” a great Mountain filling, or immediately to “fill the whole earth,” at the very time when it was “cut out of the mountain without hands?” Isaiah prophesies that of “the increase of his government and peace “there shall be no end:” but this imagination would preclude increase. The prophet says, “In the days of those “kings,” and not after they were destroyed, but when they were in full dominion; and his language implies, that the kingdom, which the God of heaven would set up, would have a sharp conflict with opposing powers, before its final victory and triumph.* It should be carefully observed, that the coming of the Messiah is not mentioned in this whole prophecy, nor even the Messiah himself. Mr. C. indeed says, ‘It pleased God to shew to Nebuchadnezzar in a dream what should come to pass until the coming of the Messiah, and that there should be four empires until that time. (P. 19. l. 5.) But this is so far from being accurate, that neither Nebuchadnezzar, nor any other man, would ever have known that a Messiah should come at all; if no clearer predictions of his coming had been given, than this prophecy contains.—With the other prophecies before us, we can understand that the fifth kingdom predicted is that of the Messiah: but, neither from Nebuchadnezzar’s dream itself, nor from Daniel’s interpretation of it, could any man have known this. If Christians have indeed adduced it as the grand proof that the Messiah should come twice; they seem to have acted very injudiciously; for, in fact, the coming of the Messiah at all cannot be proved from it, as an insulated prophecy; much less can any conclusive argument be deduced, respecting the time of his coming.—We only learn that the fifth kingdom, the kingdom which “the God of heaven should set up,” would grow from “a Stone, cut out without hands, and become a great Mountain, and fill the whole earth;” and that this vast enlargement of the Stone, into a Mountain filling the whole earth, would take place after the fourth kingdom had been divided, and would be introduced by its entire destruction and dispersion.* The dream deposes nothing beyond this: all else must be added, either from other scriptures, or from human traditions and imaginations.

* Dan. ii. 44.

P. 20. l. 11. ‘How could it be that the Messiah, &c.’ Answer: By his rising from the dead, and ascending into heaven, and being invested, as the Son of man, with all authority and “power in heaven and earth.”

L. 14. ‘He could not come before the end of the fourth empire.’ How then could he subvert it?

* Dan. ii. 33—35. 44, 45. See Is. ii. 2—4.

P. 20. l. 26. ‘The person who hath eyes, &c.’ Important subjects must be discussed by argument; and not by assuming wisdom and truth to be on our side. The reader may obtain some information on this point from the texts referred to below.*

P. 21. l. 6. ‘He will smite them only once, &c.’ Where does Daniel say this? He shall smite them, and their destruction will be effected: but nothing is spoken whether it will be by one blow or by many, at once or in a course of ages.

P. 21. l. 16. ‘NO MESSIAH FOR THE GENTILES.’ The first text adduced as a proof of this position, is an exhortation, or command, to “the daughter of Zion to rejoice, &c.” But exhortations are not always complied with; commands are not always obeyed; nor were they by “the daughter of Zion,” either in this, or in numerous other instances. “The daughter of Zion,” had cause to rejoice, and ought to have rejoiced, when her King came unto her: and some, yea many, of the tens of thousands of the Jews did rejoice;† but as the nation in general, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, in particular, rejected and crucified their King, and persecuted with unrelenting enmity his loyal subjects, they were adjudged traitors; and no wonder that the traitors did not rejoice at the coming of their King. (l. 24.) No doubt the Messiah is especially “the King of Zion;” and Jesus came to Zion. Unto thee, and not to another. (l. 19.) In the next verse after the text quoted, it is said, “He shall speak peace unto the heathen; and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth.”‡ The other texts adduced, (l. 30, &c.) either relate to widely different subjects, from the coming of the Messiah, and the question under consideration; or they will come in our way, when we consider what the prophets foretold, concerning the reception of the promised Messiah by his countrymen, and the event of their conduct in this particular.

* Prov. iii. 5, 6. xxvi. 12. Is. vi. 9, 10. xxix. 10–14. xlii. 19, 20. Rom. xi. 7–10. 2 Cor. iii. 13–18.

† Zech. ix. 9, 10. Matt. xxi. 4–11. Mark xi. 9–11. Luke xix. 36–38. John xii. 12–19.

‡ Zech. ix. 10. Eph. ii. 15–17.

P. 22. l. 5. ‘There is no Messiah, &c.’ Certainly if Jesus be not the Messiah, the Gentiles have none; nor the Jews either. Wherever Mr. C. finds a proof, that the Messiah would be Man, he imagines that he has found a proof that he is no more than man: (p. 6:) and wherever he finds, that the Messiah should come to Israel, he imagines he has found a proof, that he will not come to any except Israel. But was it predicted, that the Messiah would deliver Israel, even if they obstinately rejected him? and all Israelites, however wicked? and none but Israelites?—Moses and the prophets teach a far different doctrine.

“Thy King cometh,” “but not the King of the Gentiles.” “Unto thee,” “but not to another.” Some may think the whole of this is a quotation from the prophet; but the latter part of each clause is either interpolation, or unfounded exposition. The prophecy from Joel, some detached parts of which are quoted, does not mention the Messiah at all, or the time of his coming. It is a remarkable prediction of Israel’s Restoration, and the terrible destruction of those who obstinately oppose it; and of other coincident events, which cannot be clearly understood till the fulfillment.—But, considered as the sequel of the preceding chapter, the whole sets before us, 1st, The pouring out of the Holy Spirit on the apostles and Jews, after our Lord’s ascension. 2dly, The terrible destruction of the unbelieving Jews, at the taking and burning of their city; and their subsequent sufferings and oppressions; and 3dly, Their restoration and the destruction of their enemies.

P. 22. l. 19. ‘NO MESSIAH FOR THE GENTILES,—By

‘the proof of their gospel, &c.’ Here a similar interpolation occurs, but not of the Gentiles; as if these were the words of Matthew!*

To prove from the New Testament, that there is no Messiah for the Gentiles, is such an arduous attempt, that he who succeeds in it, needs not despair of accomplishing any thing which he can possibly undertake. But far different proof will be requisite, than that which is here given. A few hints on the texts quoted, and the use made of them, will follow the more direct argument, that the Messiah is predicted in the Old Testament, and recorded in the gospel, as ‘the Messiah of the Gentiles’ as well as of the Jews. All the prophecies, however, which speak expressly of the Messiah, with one voice announce him to be the “Messiah of the Gentiles,” as well as of Israel: but all these, as well as the numerous passages which the New Testament contains on this subject, are by Mr. C. passed over in entire silence, as if they did not exist. I, however, must adduce some of them as a specimen.—The first predictions of scripture which can possibly relate to this subject, having been given at the very time, when the distinction between Abraham and his seed, and the “families of the Gentiles,” began to be revealed, is decisive on this question. To Abraham: “In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed”†—“In thy Seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed”‡—And to Isaac, “In thy Seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed”§—And to Jacob, “In thee, and in thy Seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed.”|| Now, was the Messiah predicted in these promises to the patriarchs, or was he not?—If he were, the question is at once completely answered. All nations were to be “blessed in him,” even “all the families of the Gentiles.” If not, how, and when, and in what “seed of Abraham; Isaac, and Jacob,” have “all nations been blessed?” or, shall they hereafter be blessed? This question requires and demands a clear and full answer; or the cause is abandoned, and no such answer can possibly be given.

* Matt. ii. 6. † Gen. x. 5. 20. 31, 32. xii. 3. ‡ Gen. xxii. 18.

§ Gen. xxvi. 4. || Gen. xxviii. 14.

I shall reserve to another place, the words of God by Moses, “Rejoice ye nations with his people;”* because Mr. C. has made an observation on them, which will require notice. (p. 88.) But probably, most readers will allow that the apostle has made the proper application of it: and how could any of the nations, or Gentiles, continuing such, “rejoice with Israel,” if there were no Messiah for them? The language of the second Psalm demands our particular attention: for several things, contained in it, can be verified in no other but the Messiah. “Yet have I set,” (or anointed, Marg. Heb.) “my King upon my holy hill of “Zion—I will declare the decree—The LORD hath said “unto me, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten “thee. Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for “thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for “thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of “iron, and shall dash them in pieces like a potter’s vessel. “Be wise now therefore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye “judges of the earth. Serve the LORD with fear, and re- “joice with reverence. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, “and so ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled “but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in “him.”† How is this, that, in the midst of a prophecy of the Messiah, as “breaking the nations with a rod of iron, “and dashing them in pieces as a potter’s vessel;” the kings and judges of the earth are called on to kiss “the Son lest “he be angry?” Does not this imply submitting to him, and vowing allegiance to him, yea, honouring him as their LORD

* Deut. xxxii. 43. Rom. xv. 10.

† Ps. ii. 6-12.

and God?*" How is it that they are not only thus called on to avoid or deprecate his wrath, and escape destruction: but that a general blessing is pronounced on all, who "put their trust in him?" How could this be, if there 'were no 'Messiah for the Gentiles? Or, what blessing could be to those who trusted in him, if he were no more than Man, and "the Son of man," as other men are?† If any assert that this Psalm is not a prophecy of the Messiah; let him shew, by a fair and particular explanation of the terms employed in it, and by adducing facts coincident with it; how it was or could be fulfilled in David, or in any other, except David's Son and David's Lord; "the only "Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."—In the twenty-second Psalm, which will hereafter be shewn to be a most undeniable prophecy of "the sufferings of Christ, "and the glory that followed,"‡ it is said, "All the ends "of the earth shall remember themselves, and be turned "unto the LORD, and all the kindreds of the nations shall "worship before him."—"A seed shall serve him; they "shall be counted to the LORD for a generation. They "shall come and declare his righteousness to a people that "shall be born, that he hath done this."§ It is here predicted, that all nations on earth shall, through the Messiah, become the worshippers of JEHOVAH; and in him, "a "generation," and "a chosen generation," like that of Israel; "a nation that shall be born," according to the prophecies of Isaiah; "He shall be called the everlasting Father," or, "the Father of the age to come." and "He shall see his "seed, and shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the "LORD shall prosper in his hand."||

In another Psalm, it is said, "His name shall endure for

* 1 Sam. x. 1. 1 Kings xix. 18. Hos. xiii. 2.

† Ps. cxlvi. 3--6. Jer. xvii. 5--8. ‡ Luke xxiv. 26, 27. 44--47.
1 Pet. i. 10--12. § Ps. xxii. 27--31. || Is. ix. 6. liii. 10.

“ever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and “men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him “blessed:”* or, “shall bless themselves in him;” the very words, are used in the original, which occur in the promise made to Abraham,† except as the preterite with the vau con-versive, is used in one place, and the future in the other.
 Now, is this Psalm a prophecy of the Messiah, or is it not? If it be, then, “all nations shall bless themselves in “him,” and “call him blessed:” but how can this be, if there be ‘no Messiah for the Gentiles?’ If it is not; let it be shewn how the several particulars predicted in it, were, or could be, accomplished in the short lived glory of Solomon’s reign.—“Surely a greater than Solomon is here!”

“The LORD hath made known his salvation: his right-“ousness hath he openly shewed in the sight of the heathen.
 “He hath remembered his mercy and truth to the house of “Israel; and all the ends of the earth have seen the Salva“tion of our God.” “Make a joyful noise unto God, all “the earth, &c.”‡ But how shall “all the ends of the “earth see and rejoice in the Salvation of God,” if there be ‘no Messiah for the Gentiles?’

But, for the sake of brevity, I shall pass over many other evident predictions of the same events. It will not be denied, that Isaiah prophesied of the Messiah, as “the Rod “from the stem of Jesse,” in the eleventh chapter: but he there says, “The earth shall be full of the knowledge of “the LORD, as the waters cover the sea. And in that day
 “there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an “ensign to the people, to it shall the Gentiles seek, and his “rest shall be glorious.” This precedes the prediction of ‘the Restoration of Israel,’ and the song of praise prepared by the Holy Spirit, for the use of converted Israel on that

* Ps. lxxii. 17.

† Gen. xxii. 18.

‡ Ps. xcvi. 2—4. See also Ps. lxxxvi. 9. cxvii.

grand occasion.* The apostle quotes part of the prophecy from the Septuagint: "He that shall arise to reign over the Gentiles, in him shall the Gentiles trust."† This gives the real import, though not an exact translation. Let it, however, be observed, that he who sprang from Jesse's root, would "stand for an ensign to the peoples;"‡ and "to him would the Gentiles seek; and his rest would be glorious." For, Shiloh being come, "to him would the gathering of the peoples be;" "All nations would bless themselves in him," and find a "more glorious rest," than Israel did in Canaan.§ Now the Gentiles could not flock to the Messiah, as to a standard;|| they could not seek to him, and find a "glorious rest in him;" if there were 'no Messiah for the Gentiles.'¶

"In this mountain shall the LORD of hosts make to all peoples" (plural,) "a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all peoples, and the veil which is spread over all nations, &c." How, or when, has this prophecy been fulfilled, or can it be fulfilled, except the blessings of Messiah's reign be imparted to all nations? And how is it possible, if there be 'no Messiah for the Gentiles?'

"Behold my Servant, whom I uphold, my Elect in whom my soul delighteth, I have put my Spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.—He shall not fail or be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law."††—"In his name shall the Gentiles trust." (Sept.) Thus the evangelist

* Is. xi. 9—16. xii. † Rom. xv. 12. ‡ John iii. 14, 15. xii. 32.
 § Mat. xi. 28—30. Heb. iv. 8, 9. || Is. v. 26. xiii. 2. xviii. 3.
 xxx. 17. Heb. ¶ See also Is. xix. 23—25,  Is. xxv. 5—8.
 †† Is. xlii. 1—4.

quotes it. His law, evidently means his instruction, doctrine, command, as in another prophecy of Isaiah.* “For his “law shall the Gentiles look with expectation,” וְיִחְלְוּ † “The LORD hath called thee in righteousness, and will “hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and will give thee “for a covenant of the people, for a Light to the Gentiles; “to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from “the prison; and them that sit in darkness out of the “prison-house.”—“Sing unto the LORD a new song; and “his praise from the end of the earth, ye that go down “to the sea, and all that is therein; the isles and all the “inhabitants thereof.”‡—What! ‘Is there no Messiah for the “Gentiles?’ When “the Gentiles shall wait for his law;” he “shall be the Light of the Gentiles.” “When all the in- “habitants of the isles shall sing,” on account of him, “a “new song unto the LORD.”§ Who can help recollecting, in this connexion, the words of old Simeon? “Mine eyes “have seen thy Salvation; which thou hast prepared before “the face of all people; a Light to lighten the Gentiles, “and to be the glory of thy people Israel.”||

“And now, saith the LORD, who formed me from the “womb, to be his Servant, to bring Jacob again to him: “though Israel be not gathered; yet shall I be glorious “in the eyes of the LORD, and my God shall be my “Strength. And he said, It is a light thing, that thou “shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, “and to restore the preserved of Israel. I will also give “thee for a Light of the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my “salvation to the ends of the earth.”¶ Some parts of this prediction will come again under consideration: but the question here recurs; Is the whole a prophecy of the

* Is. ii. 2—4. † Is. xlii. 5. li. 5. Heb. ‡ Is. xlii. 6, 7. 10—12. Zech. ix. 11. Acts xxvi. 18—20. § Rev. v. 9, 10. xiv. 3.

‡ Luke ii. 25—32. Acts x'ii. 47. xxviii. 28. ¶ Is. xlix. 5—12.

Messiah, or is it not? If not: whom, and what events, does it foretel? When hath it been, or when will it be, fulfilled? It is impossible to give any other interpretation of it, considered clause by clause, than that which refers it to the Messiah; the treatment, which he met with from the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles: but how can these things be, if there be ‘no Messiah for the Gentiles?’ It foretels also, that Israel, as a nation would not be gathered by the Messiah; but only a remnant of them, called “the preserved of Israel.” For “the Redeemer of Israel, and “his holy One,” addressed “him, whom man despiseth, “whom the nation abhorreth, a servant of rulers;” yet it is predicted that “kings shall see and arise, princes also “shall worship, because of the LORD, who is faithful;” with much more to the same effect.*—“Behold,” says the LORD, “I have given him for a Witness to the people, “a Leader and a Commander to the people. Behold, thou “shalt call a nation, that thou knowest not, and nations “that knew not thee, shall run unto thee.”† Who is this, to whom “nations, who knew him not shall run,” but “Shiloh, to whom the gathering of the people shall be:” Is not then the Messiah predicted, as the Messiah of the Gentiles?‡

In fact, I feel myself in this part of my subject, pressed with a considerable difficulty; having only the choice of two things, each apart undescribable: viz, either to pass over, and as it were suppress, a great part of the evidence; or to weary the reader with tedious argument, and superfluous evidence. I, therefore, only just touch upon points which might with great advantage be more fully opened, were proofs scanty; and pass over, or merely refer to, portions compared with Rom. x. 19—21.

* Is. xlix. 22, 23.
Acts xi. 26. lxvi. 18—22.

† Is. lv. 4, 5. See also Is. lx. lxv. 1, 2,
‡ Is. lxv. 14, 15, compared with of scripture, alone sufficient to decide the argument, beyond all reasonable controversy. Some of these will come in our way, on other topics; and I must hasten to conclude this part, by a few quotations from the other prophets.

“O Lord,” says Jeremiah, “my Strength and my Fortress, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.”* Certainly “the Gentiles from the ends of the earth,” are here represented, as, of their own accord, “coming unto” the true God, as renouncing idols, and as avowing themselves his worshippers. But shall this take place under the Messiah’s reign, or at some other time?

Do the apostles give the true meaning of the predictions of Hosea, when they apply them to the conversion of the Gentiles?—“I will call them my people, which were not my people, and her beloved, which was not beloved: and it shall come to pass, that in the place, where it was said unto them, ye are not my people, there shall they be called the children of the living God.”† Certainly, apart from all claims of inspiration, the application must be considered as very reasonable and apposite, by every attentive and impartial reader.

One would suppose, that a man, not previously biassed either way, could hardly avoid falling in with the apostle James’s application of a prophecy by Amos. “Simeon hath declared, how God did at the first visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name: and to this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written, After this I will return, and build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and will set them up; that the residue of men

* Jer. xvi. 19. † Compare Hos. i. 10. ii. 23. with Rom. ix. 25, 26. 1 Pet. ii. 9, 10.

“ may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom “ my name is called, saith the LORD who doeth all these “ things.”* The variation of the Septuagint, whence for substance the quotation is made, from the Hebrew text, as it stands at present, does not at all affect the general meaning. But the reader may observe, that in Amos, this prediction concerning the Gentiles, is introduced between a remarkable prophecy of the dispersion of Israel, as at this day; and another as remarkable, a prediction of his restoration ;† and that it is expressly connected with the kingdom of the Son of David.—Again, another prophet says,
 “ The LORD will furnish all the gods of the earth; and “ men shall worship him, every one from his place, even “ all the isles of the heathen.”‡ Does not this foretel the conversion of Gentiles, to the worship of the true God, not at Jerusalem, but “ every one from his place?” and when shall this be, but under the reign of the Messiah?§

“ Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for lo, I come,
 “ and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the LORD;
 “ and many nations shall be joined together to the LORD
 “ in that day, and shall be my people; and thou shalt
 “ know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto thee.”||
 Who is the Speaker in this prediction? Is not the Messiah?
 When he comes to the daughter of Zion “ many nations shall “ be joined to the LORD, and become his people.” The passage, from the eighth of Zechariah has before been considered.

“ From the rising of the sun, unto the going down thereof, “ my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every “ place, incense shall be offered unto my name, and a “ pure offering; for my name shall be great among the “ heathen.”¶

* Comp. Am. ix. 11, 12. with Acts xv. 14—17. † Am. ix. 9—15.

‡ Zeph. ii. 11. § Zeph. iii. 9. || Zech. ii. 10, 11. ¶ Mal. i. 11.

To what times does this last of the ancient prophets refer in this prediction? Does he not evidently speak of the times of the Messiah? “Under his reign, the name of JEHOVAH, shall be great among the Gentiles,” and “in every place,” acceptable worship shall be rendered; as acceptable, as the incense and oblations at the temple, when presented in the most proper manner: But how can this be, if there is ‘no Messiah for the Gentiles?’

“To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.”* “Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes of the Gentiles also.”†—When it is considered, that Israel, taken at his largest increase, through all generations hitherto, hath not formed one hundredth part of the human species, probably not above one third of that proportion; the mind revolts from the idea of the Creator wholly overlooking all the rest of mankind, and confining all his special favours to this single nation. Nothing could reconcile the man of reflection to this, but some clear proof, that this favoured nation was, either by nature, or at least by grace, and in character, decidedly more holy and devoted to God, than other nations: but their whole scriptural history, and the testimonies of Moses and all the prophets, and even that of their own historian, decide against this. It would also be previously expected, in this case, that uniform pre-eminence in prosperity, as well as piety, would have been conspicuous, in all the annals of the nation: but the contrary to this has hitherto been the case; and the whole term from the calling of Abraham to this day, must constitute a vast proportion of the duration of the world, according to the scriptures.—If, however, the word of God had so decided it, though contrary to all analogy and reasoning, we ought to be silent, and adore the depths, which we cannot fathom: but, while a precedency of honour and distinction is reserved for Israel; it seems to be the clear tenour of scripture, that this precedency was not conceded, merely for their own benefit; but, that they might be a blessing to the nations of the earth in general. "I will bless thee, and thou shalt be a blessing;" "In thee and in thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." This Israel has been, and shall be, most eminently: and it might be thought this was more desirable and honourable, than a monopoly of blessings, with curses on all other nations on their account.

* Acts x. 43.

† Rom. iii. 29.

But Mr. C. is not apt to despair of his cause: and what it was impossible he could support out of the Old Testament, he attempts to prove from the New!

In quoting from Matthew, he inserts, 'but not the Gentiles;' (p. 22. l. 22,) which is assuming the point in debate. The scribes did not consider the Messiah, as the Messiah of the Gentiles; and neither the prophet, nor the evangelist was speaking on that subject.

P. 22. l. 24. 'I am not sent, &c' The personal ministry of Christ was intended to be principally among "the lost sheep of the house of Israel:" yet he healed the centurion's servant, and commended his faith; and added, "Many shall come from the east, and from the west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven: but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out, into outer darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."* He healed also the daughter of the woman of Canaan, and commended her faith.† He spent two days among the Samaritans.‡ He said expressly to the chief priests and elders, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation

* Matt. viii. 5—13.

† Matt. xv. 21—28.

‡ John iv. 39—42.

“bringing forth the fruit thereof.”* And his instructions to his apostles shew what he purposed, concerning his future church or kingdom.†—It would not be fair, to argue with Jews from the New Testament, if they did not absurdly claim its authority, against the whole religion contained in it. But this assuredly can never serve their cause.

L. 25. ‘When the Son of man, &c.’—When our Lord says to his apostles, “Ye shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel;”‡ he was so far from exclusively assigning the blessings of his kingdom to Israel, that he predicted the condemnation of Israel, by the testimony and judgment of his apostles.§

Last line. ‘Christ forgot the whole world, &c.’—What has already been stated sufficiently answers this; especially his commission, given to the apostles,|| and his account of the day of judgment.¶

P. 23. l. 7. ‘Neither Christ, &c.’—By far the greatest part of the history of Christianity, in the acts of the apostles, and the apostolical epistles, relate to the Gentiles. But let the reader consult the passages referred to.

It does not appear, why the quotation from Philipians was brought in (l. 10, 11;) except to introduce the assertion that follows; which would have stood quite as well alone as with this introduction.

L. 14. ‘Hitherto we have proved, &c.’—I trust the contrary to all this has been fully proved: viz, That the Messiah is come; that the Messiah was predicted, as “the Messiah of the Gentiles,” as well as of Israel; that Jesus was the promised Messiah; and that he is “over all, God blessed for evermore.”

* Matt. xxi. 43.

† Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Mark xvi. 15, 16.

Luke xxiv. 47.

‡ Matt. xix. 28.

§ 1 Cor. vi. 1—6.

|| Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Mark xvi. 15, 16. Luke xxiv. 47. ¶ Matt. xxv. 31—46.

 Rom. iii. 29. ix. 24—32. x. 12—21. xi. 11—13.

1 Thes. ii. 16, 17.

L. 21, 22. ‘I am sent only to the house of Israel, &c.’ “I am not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.” These are our Lord’s words in the passage referred to.* His personal ministry, and his commission to his apostles have already been considered: and it will hereafter be fully shewn, that “the house of Israel,” including and principally signifying the rulers, priests, and teachers of Israel; that is, “the blind guides,” false teachers, and hypocritical wicked rulers of Israel; means something vastly different from “the lost sheep of the house of Israel.” He was sent “to the lost sheep,” and not to the wicked shepherds “of Israel;” through whose crimes, the people were “as sheep not having a shepherd.”†

L. 23. ‘Why did they not believe in him?’ Answer, “Because they had not the love of God in them:” “because they received honour one of another, and sought not the honour which cometh from God only:” and because “they loved the praise of men, more than the praise of God.”‡ Because of the ambition, avarice, enmity against God, and wickedness of their hearts and lives.

L. 24. ‘Whose word shall stand, &c.’—I know not, how Mr. C. means to apply this: but certainly the unbelief of the Jews, when the Messiah came, fulfilled and established “the words of God,” as spoken by the ancient prophets.§ This will be shewn more fully hereafter: at present, let it be noticed, that Zechariah distinguishes between the “poor of the flock, that waited” on the Messiah; or “the lost sheep of the house of Israel,” and all the rest of Israel, especially the pastors of the flock.

L. 26. ‘When Moses &c.’ Did the Israelites so unreservedly welcome Moses, when God sent him to them, as

* Matt. xv. 24. † Mark vi. 34. ‡ John v. 42—44. viii. 33.
42—44. xii. 43. § Is. xlix. 4, 5. 7. liii. 1, 2. Zech. xi. 7—11.
Mal. iii. 1, 2. Rom. iii. 3, 4.

as to give Mr. C. a ground of glorying on that account? The narrative given us by Moses himself, and the language of all the prophets, exhibit a widely different view of the subject. The mission of Moses was expressly for the purpose of bringing Israel, as a nation, out of Egypt; their conduct therefore was not permitted wholly to defeat this design. "But," says God by Ezekiel, "they rebelled against me, and would not hearken unto me; then I said, I will pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt. But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen."* And Moses, having numbered up many of the rebellions of Israel, concludes by saying, "Ye have been rebellious against the LORD from the day that I knew you."† Nothing but the terrific displays of the divine glory, and dreadful miracles, by which thousands at a time were destroyed, proved sufficient to curb their revolting and rebellious spirit; and to deter them from stoning Moses, and returning unto Egypt: so that the event was, that the generation which God brought out of Egypt, fell in the wilderness, by the awful judgments of God, notwithstanding the persevering intercessions of Moses and Aaron for them.‡ This was also expressly the punishment of their unbelief: "Yea, they despised the pleasant land, they believed not his word."§ Even a candid Jew, who has well studied the books of Moses and the prophets, must allow that Stephen had scriptural ground for saying to the rulers of Israel, "Ye stiff-necked, and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye.—Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted?"|| Except as he concluded by

* Ez. xx. 8, 9.

† Deut. ix. 24.

‡ Ex. v. xxxii. Num. xi. xiii. xiv. xvi. xxv.

§ Deut. i. 22. ix. 23. Ps. cvi. 24—27. Heb. iv. 18. 19.

|| Acts vii. 51, 52.

applying it to their conduct towards Jesus of Nazareth. This might be urged much further,* but I forbear. The argument, if it prove any thing, proves that the mission of any one who professed to be the Messiah, must be tried, whether it were of God or not, by the national reception with which he met; and not by the credentials which he produced, that he was indeed sent by God: or, that no demonstration could have been sufficient, had the Jewish rulers and people persisted in unbelief. By the fulfilment of ancient prophecies, by stupendous miracles of mercy, by the coincidence of his instructions with those of Moses and the prophets, by the most perfect example of holiness, and by the subsequent most astonishing and beneficial effects even to this day, God has said, ‘This is the Messiah;’ “this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him.”

L. 30. ‘But Israel said, No.’ And Israel’s word is, according to Mr. C. to prevail against the word of God.

L. 32. ‘To what purpose, &c.?’ “But what if some did not believe, shall their unbelief make the word of God of none effect? God forbid.” To what purpose was Moses sent to Pharaoh, to demand the liberation of Israel, when God had said, “I am sure that the king of Egypt will not let you go, no, not by a mighty hand?”† To what purpose did God commission Isaiah to “go and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not; make the heart of this people fat, &c.?” When Mr. C. has answered these questions, he will have answered his own. Many and important ends were answered, even respecting the unbelieving Jews, and the glory of God in his dealings with them; as an instruction to the whole world, by the coming of the Messiah to them; though

* Is. liii. 1, 2. Rom. iii. 3.

† Ex. iii. 19—Comp. ix. 16, 17.

‡ Is. vi. 9, 10—Comp. Matt. xiii. 14, 15. John xii. 38—40. Acts xviii. 25—27.

God foreknew and foretold, that the bulk of the nation would not believe in him. But objections of this kind are not started by Jews alone: for multitudes of nominal Christians seem to be the dupes of them; though in fact they are absurd and impious in the extreme. Upon the supposition that God foreknew the perverse and ruinous use, which men would make of his gifts, of whatever kind; they, in language as remote as possible from reverence of his holy name, either expressly, or by consequence, charge him with having done wrong in conferring them. Thus, for instance, we frequently hear an objection started against thanking God for our creation; because he foreknew, that to multitudes creation would, through their own wickedness, become a curse. "It had been good for that man, if he had never been born." Thus they transfer the guilt from those, who pervert the goodness of God by their crimes to their own destruction, unto God who foresaw that they would do this! How deeply this kind of reasoning infects the speculations of men, in controversies concerning the distinguishing and undeserved mercies of God, to some of our fallen race above others, must here be only hinted. In many cases it forms the grand hinge on which the controversy turns. But how could these things be otherwise, unless God were not omniscient, or not the moral and providential Governor of the universe?

L. 33. 'Did God intend, &c?' "He shall be for a Sanctuary: but for a Stone of stumbling, and a Rock of offence to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and many among them shall stumble and fall, and be snared, and be taken."* The answer, contained in these words, does not depend on our interpretation of them.† However explained, they prove that God did appoint events in his providence, which he

* Is. viii. 13-15.

† Rom. ix. 32, 23. xi. 8-11. 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8

foreknew and foretold, would be “a Stone of stumbling, and “Rock of offence to both the houses of Israel.”*

P. 24. 1. 1. ‘The word of God came to nothing, &c.’ It has already been shewn, that the ‘word of God,’ as it related to the Messiah, and as fulfilled in Jesus, did ‘not come to ‘nothing;’ but produced effects of most prodigious amplitude, and most beneficial and enduring consequences to the human race at large. But the second and third clauses of this passage are certainly true; ‘the Messiah (even the true ‘Messiah) was rejected and despised, and he lost his life.’ It would too much interrupt our argument to take up the subject in this place: but I shall hereafter illustrate the apostle’s words, by inductions from the prophets, “Him, “being delivered, by the determinate counsel and fore-“knowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands “have crucified and slain; whom God hath raised up, hav-“ing loosed the pains of death,” &c.† Or, rather the words of our Lord himself, “Thus it is written, and thus it be-“hoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third “day.”‡ In this especially ‘the scriptures of the prophets’ were fulfilled; and in this all the grand ends of the Mes- siah’s coming were accomplished, and could not have been effected, according to the prophets, in any other way.§

P. 24. 1. 3. ‘We also learn, &c.’ The words of the apostle Paul are entirely coincident with the several prophecies of the Old Testament, which he quotes:∥ and therefore the charge brought against him, falls on David and Isaiah; or rather on the Holy Spirit who spake by them. Men first proudly and wickedly close their own eyes against the truth, in determined unbelief; and then God, as a punishment, shuts them up in unbelief.

* Comp. Ps. cxviii. 22, 23. Matt. xxi. 42—45. Acts iv. 11.

† Acts ii. 23, 24.

‡ Luke xxiv. 46.

§ Ps. xxii. lix.

Is. liii. Dan. ix. 24—27. Zech. xiii. 7.

∥ Ps. lxxix. 22—28. Is. vi.

9, 10. xxxix. 10. Rom. xi. 7—10.

L. 10. ‘Had Israel, &c.’ The unbelief of Israel was merely the occasion, not the cause, of the calling of the Gentiles, which had been predicted from the time, when the distinction between Abraham with his seed and the Gentiles commenced.

L. 13. ‘Israel was to be made guilty, &c.’ If ‘to be made guilty,’ means ‘to be brought in guilty as a criminal ‘by a just verdict,’ God ‘made Israel guilty:’ but they themselves committed, wilfully and obstinately, the crimes, by which they exposed themselves to this righteous condemnation. Yet it has been shewn, that an immense number “of the lost sheep of the house of Israel,” were previously gathered into his fold by the good Shepherd, who “came “to seek and to save that which was lost.”

I must notice with decided disapprobation, the whole passage under consideration; as destitute of reverence towards God, and humility before him. However criminal the conduct of Israel was; however obstinate in rebellion, and most unreasonable in unbelief: still if God “leave them to their “own hearts’ lusts,” and they reject the Messiah, and crucify him, and are punished for it; ‘God did them wrong,’ (p. 24. l. 16,) ‘imposed on his creatures,’ (l. 17,) ‘destroyed them ‘without cause: (l. 22, 23.) Yet the Jews themselves have never been able to assign any other adequate cause, of the unexampled miseries, and degradation of their nation, for above one thousand seven hundred years. By the common voice of the rulers and people, when demanding the crucifixion of Jesus, they imprecated this vengeance on themselves; “His blood be upon us, and on our children.”* And so long, as they proceed to “crucify him afresh,” and put him to open shame, by saying, ‘he received due punishment, for by the law he was guilty,’ (l. 28, 29,) their dispersions and oppressions will continue. But when “the “Spirit of God shall be poured out upon them,” and they shall look with penitent sorrow, and humble faith, to “him whom they have pierced:”* they shall be gathered, restored, and honoured, even far more than in times of old. The day when this shall take place, I firmly believe to be near at hand; and I earnestly long and pray for it, as the very crisis of the world, so to speak. In the full persuasion that such will be the event ere long, I have engaged in this argument, and desire to conduct it in a manner as conciliatory, as regard to truth and holiness will permit; in hopes of being an instrument, in some small degree, of effecting the happy revolution.

* Matt. xvii. 25.

If it was the purpose of God, that Israel as a nation should welcome the promised Messiah; and if it was previously revealed that they would: then, Israel, as a nation, will receive him (l. 24) when he comes; and he has not yet come.

The text from Isaiah,† (l. 30, &c.) certainly proves, that the word of God shall accomplish his purpose, whatever that may be: but this does not inform us what that purpose is, at least in regard to Israel as a nation. Concerning the secret purposes of God we know nothing. He predicted that Israel as a nation would reject the Messiah, and be themselves for a long time excluded on that account.‡

P. 25. l. 10. ‘When he is sent he will be the Leader.’ The Messiah as Leader of the company, is not mentioned. In a preceding part of the chapter indeed he is, but not exactly so as to suit Mr. C.’s argument. “Behold, I have given “him for a Witness to the people, a Leader and Commander “to the people. Behold thou shalt call a nation that thou “knowest not, and nations that knew not thee, shall run “unto thee, because of the LORD thy God, and for the

* Ez. xx. 37, 38. 43, 44. Zech. xii. 9—14.

† Is. lv. 10, 11.

‡ Is. xlix. 7. l. 1, 2. Hos. iii. 4, 5.

“Holy One of Israel, for he hath glorified thee.”* The nations here spoken of must be the Gentiles; and this is the only place in which Israel is mentioned throughout the chapter.

L. 13. ‘Who being, &c.’ Here Mr. C. charges Jesus with wishing to set up for himself, and to be “equal with God:” (l. 15, 16,) but in another passage he says, ‘Jesus himself never thought of such a thing; therefore he called himself the Son of man; but had he thought that he was God, he would have called himself the Son of a woman.’ (p. 8.)—That Jesus did prosper and accomplish astonishing things has already been shewn. Mr. C. might have rendered his statement, in the next words (l. 17—21,) more convincing, if he could have quoted the words, which he puts into the mouth of the Messiah, from “the scriptures of the prophets,” instead of “speaking them out of his own heart,” and according to what he supposes will be the case.

L. 22. ‘WAS THE MESSIAH OF THE GENTILES A PROPHET, OR NOT?’—The questions concerning our Lord’s predictions will come before us, more regularly in another place. (p. 67, 68.) Indeed, after Mr. C. had decided that Jesus was justly put to death, the question itself seems to come too late. The clause however from the seventy-fourth Psalm requires a brief notice. (l. 25—36.) It is plain, from the whole of this Psalm, that it was written at a time, or at least that it referred to a time, when the sanctuary lay in ruins.† Either this was during the Babylonish captivity, or after the destruction of the temple by the Romans. If it related to the Babylonish captivity, it can be nothing to the purpose; for several prophets arose subsequent to that event. If it refer to the times following the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; it does most affectingly describe the state of the Jews, during above seventeen centuries:

* Is. lv, 4, 5.

† Ps. lxxiv. 3—9

but as Jesus lived, and died, and arose again, many years before the destruction of the second temple; it can prove nothing against his character as a Prophet, for it relates exclusively to subsequent times.

P. 26. l. 1—7. The prophecy of Daniel has been considered; but “the sealing up the vision and prophecy,” or “Prophet,” relates to times three or four hundred years subsequent to Malachi; namely to the end of the seventy weeks, which Christians calculate to have been about the time of the crucifixion of Jesus; Mr. C. computes them to end, either with the death of king Agrippa and his son Mernes, or at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. There was no prophet in Israel, from Malachi, till near the times of Jesus; but the scripture does not say there never would be any: and, however satisfied Mr. C. may be on the subject; the scribes, and priests, and elders, in our Lord’s time, confessed, that they did not know, whether John Baptist was a prophet or not.

L. 8. ‘One thing, &c.’—If this proposition can be established, the business is settled: for as Israel is not restored, if ‘the restoration of Israel, and the coming of the Messiah’ be the same thing, it is plain that the Messiah is not come! Indeed if ‘the Messiah is Israel and Israel the ‘Messiah:’ (l. 10, 11,) then the Messiah came, when God surnamed Jacob by the name of Israel: the Messiah is now dispersed throughout the earth; the Messiah is to be restored, and not to restore others. What Mr. C. means by this, I know not: but if he speaks the language of his nation, it proves, that the Jews are apt to think of themselves, as the whole world; and that nothing is of much consequence, in the dispensations of Providence, except as it tends to the aggrandisement of their nation.

L. 12. ‘The next, &c.’—It has generally been thought, that Elias, or Elijah, the prophet, either personally, or by one "in his spirit and power," would precede the coming of the Messiah. This the prophets foretold:* and this the ancient Jews fully expected.† But, not to dwell on this, Mr. C. here allows that the Messiah will be a Prophet: and we allow, that if Jesus were not the Messiah, he could not be a Prophet; and from the fulfilment of the prophecies of Jesus, we draw a most conclusive argument, that he was the Messiah. With whom then does Mr. C. contend; when assuming, that 'Jesus was not the Messiah,' he attempts to prove, 'that he was not a prophet?' Not with Christians certainly. But in truth, the fulfilment of our Lord's prophecies stands very much in the way of the Jews; and they seem sometimes to have great misgivings on the subject; and almost to say among themselves; 'If not the Messiah, 'but a deceiver; how could he be a prophet? And, if 'not a prophet, how could he predict the state of Jerusalem, 'and of the Jews, for so many hundred years to come, and 'with such wonderful particularity?' This obstruction Mr. C. repeatedly labours to remove; but I must think, completely without success.—The reader must determine, whether the right interpretation of the prophecy in Joel, is given by the apostles, or by Mr. C. (1. 15.)‡ One thing should be noted, that after the prediction "of the pouring "out of the Spirit," and its effects; it is added, "I will "shew wonders in the heavens, and in the earth, blood, and "fire, and pillars of smoke; the sun shall be turned into "darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and "terrible day of the LORD come."§ The extraordinary appearances, in the heavens, would be presages of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, and of the subversion of the Jewish church and state; which would be attended by immense bloodshed, terrible conflagrations, and "pillars

* Is. xl. 3—9. Mal. iii. 1. iv. 3, 4.

† John i. 19—28.

‡ Joel ii. 28—32. Acts ii. 16—21. Rom. x. 11—15. § Joel ii. 30, 31.

“of smoke,” such as ascend from the flames of burning cities. Now, is not this a prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the dissolution of the civil and ecclesiastical state of the Jews, with dreadful massacres, and miseries? Yet this is predicted as subsequent to “the pouring out of the Spirit:” and only a remnant would be rescued from these tremendous judgments. The events predicted in the New Testament, and recorded in Josephus’s History of the Wars of the Jews, confirm this interpretation. The third chapter of Joel contains a prediction of Israel’s restoration, but the second predicts those events which made it necessary.

L. 24. ‘Thus far, &c.’ Mr. C.’s inferences, at least, are not deficient in perspicuity and decision.

L. 26. ‘THE GENTILES’ QUESTION.—Only one, &c.’

L. 29. ‘THE ANSWER OF THE JEWS.—Miracles, &c.’ This, and the following pages, suggest a most important question—‘HOW FAR AND IN WHAT CASES, MIRACLES ARE ‘THE PROOF OF A DIVINE MISSION?’ But before we proceed to the more direct answer to it, a few particulars require a cursory notice.

P. 26, last line. p. 27. l. 1. ‘THE WISE MEN OF PHARAOH performed also the same miracles, &c.’—Indeed! The magicians imitated, or rather aped, a few of Moses’s miracles; whether by Satanical aid or not, or by what power, forms no part of our present question. Their rods were turned into serpents, as well as his: but his rod devoured theirs, and their rods disappeared. When, at the word of Moses, the waters of Egypt had been turned into blood; they also turned into blood a little of the water, which the mercy of God had spared: but to equal the miracle of God by Moses, they should have turned the rivers, and reservoirs, and streams of blood throughout the land into water. They added to the plague of frogs; but they could do nothing towards removing it. They could neither produce lice, nor remove the disgusting and mortifying plague; but were forced to confess, "This is the finger of God."* "The boil was upon the magicians," as well as upon the other Egyptians, and they "could not stand before Moses."† Thus they were driven with contempt from the field of contest, and are no more mentioned by Moses. But why did God thus display the superior power of the miracles wrought by Moses, in the sight of Pharaoh and the Egyptians, if 'miracles be no proof of a divine mission?' Why did he work one miracle after another, in proof of this, if the miracles wrought did not prove it? Why did Moses afterwards, in the wilderness, appeal to the miracle about to be wrought, in the rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram? "If these men die the death of all men, or be visited after the visitation of all men, then the LORD hath not sent me: but if the LORD make a new thing,‡ and the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit; then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the LORD."§ And why did Elijah, (having put the proof of the important cause, whether JEHOVAH, or Baal, were God, on the answer by fire,) thus address the LORD—"LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day, that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and have done all these things at thy word?"¶ Why, I say, did he make such an appeal, if 'miracles be no proof of a divine mission?' The miracles of Moses were wrought by the power of God; those of the magicians by their enchantments.

P. 27. l. 5. 'To drive devils, &c.' Whatever credit may

* Ex. viii. 19. Luke xi. 20. † Ex. ix. 11. 2 Tim. iii. 8, 9.

‡ See Jer. xxxi. 22. § Num. xvi. 29, 30. See also 1 Sam. xii. 16-18.

¶ 1 Kings xviii. 36, 37.

be attached to Josephus's narrative; no doubt, exorcists among the Jews, cast out devils in some instances, or induced them to go out. But, even in this respect, the miracles of Christ were so vastly superior, and so stupendous, that the people said, "It was never so seen in Israel:" and the Pharisees were compelled to allege, that he cast out "devils by Beelzebub the prince of the devils."* It must be evident that evil spirits cannot be constrained to quit their hold of a man, in any way, except by a superior power.† This superior power 'a common man' has not: (l. 6;) either God or angels must help him, or the devil must retire from motives of policy.

L. 7. 'They have even the power, &c.' I do not here presume to determine, what evil spirits are or are not able to perform, or discover, or foretel by sagacity or conjecture, as far as God may see good to permit; or how far all divination, fortune-telling, and sorcery have been from Satanical agency, or from human imposture. But the power and foresight of evil spirits must have limits; they cannot be infinite: and when the apostle in the name of Jesus, cast out the spirit from the Pythoness;‡ and when he terminated the enchantment, so that the effect was manifest both to the enraged masters, and to the multitude; and when he silenced the prophetess by a single word: it was sufficient proof of superior power and authority.

L. 13. 'Two men, &c.' Mr. C. informs us that he learned the additional particulars, which he relates concerning Jamnes and Jambres, from tradition: and it may amuse the reader to learn, that Mohammed, perhaps on as good authority, records, that they were converted, and cruelly martyred by Pharaoh.—I do not clearly understand Mr. C.'s language, 'Symbols, they also prophesied, but all by the works of the 'devil:' (l. 17.) The number however, of well authenticated undeniable miracles, wrought publickly, before powerful enemies, in proof of a religion not yet established in authority, will, on investigation, be found very few indeed. Impostures in abundance are recorded; and some ambiguous events, which, whether they arose from human, or Satanical delusion, may admit of a doubt: but nothing can be adduced which will bear a comparison with the miracles of Christ, any more than those of the Egyptian magicians could with the miracles of Moses. ‘None can say, I command that a fire shall come down from heaven:’ ‘none of them can say I command the sun to stand still?’ (l. 21.) May we not add, None could say, to one who had been four days dead, “Lazarus, come forth.” None could say to the winds and waves, in a tremendous storm: “Peace, be still, and there was a great calm.”

* Matt. ix. 32—34. xii. 22—24. † Matt. xii. 29, 30. ‡ Acts xvi. 16—19.

There was no occasion for our Lord to command “the sun to stand still;” unless for the purpose of ostentation, or to gratify the wicked presumption of the scribes and Pharisees: nor would there have been any propriety in calling for fire from heaven, by him, “who came to save and not to destroy.” But the sun was darkened, and the promised land became as Egypt, in the plague of darkness, while the lands of the Gentiles were as Goshen; when Jesus was suspended on the cross.

L. 26. ‘There shall no sign, &c.’ Let the reader compare the words of Matthew, with those here quoted from Mark: “An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas.”* The sign, which our Lord gave the Jews, was that of his own resurrection on the third day; which, as predicted and accomplished, to the confusion and silencing of his powerful enemies, and as connected with its extensive and permanent effects, was immensely more conclusive, than any transient "sign from heaven" could have been.

* Matt. xii. 38—40. xvi. 1—4.

L. 31. 'It was his duty, &c.' Our Lord, in his character of the Ambassador, or Apostle, of the Father, was required, and if such language must be used, concerning "the Lord of all," 'it was his duty,' to "fulfil the will of him who sent him;" but not to gratify the unreasonable demands of those to whom he was sent, who "hated both him and his Father." God gives that degree and kind of evidence, which he knows to be suitable and sufficient; and not such, as his rebellious subjects may insolently require.—"Nay, father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent: and he said unto them; If they believe not Moses and the prophets, neither would they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."* They, who said, "Let Christ the King of Israel descend from the cross, that we may see and believe;" "Let him come down from the cross, and we will believe him;" (a demand subversive of the whole design, for which he came into the world, as predicted throughout the Old Testament;) were by no means disposed to believe in him, when he just after "arose from the dead."

Moses did not work such miracles, as either Pharaoh, or Israel, prescribed to him: but such, and such only, as God directed him to work. He who teaches the prophet his duty, in the execution of his prophetic office, prescribes the conduct, which he presumptuously thinks ought to have been adopted by God himself. The false prophets were the compliant persons; not Elijah, Micaiah, and the other true prophets.†

P. 28. l. 16. 'Moses the Lord of, &c.'—The reader must

* Luke xvi. 29–31.

† Ahab's messenger wanted to teach Micaiah his duty, or, more modestly, to counsel him; but he received his answer. 1 Kings xxii. 13, 14.

determine, how properly Moses, or any mere man can be called 'the Lord of all the prophets.'

L. 23--35. From the statement given in this passage, it might be supposed, that God first commissioned Moses to work miracles before the people; but because Moses knew that this would 'not be sufficient to convince them,' he was 'sent by God,' that "the token" was afterwards added. Whereas the token was first given; and, it seems, Moses supposed that it would be insufficient, and therefore, the commission to work miracles was added. Indeed the whole passage in Mr. C. is a reversal of the order, in which the narrative by Moses is arranged.

But let that narrative speak for itself. "Moses said unto God, Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt? And he said, Certainly I will be with thee; and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee, when thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain."* "This shall be a token unto thee," for his own satisfaction, as one who believed the promise of God. It does not appear that the people were made acquainted with it; and his asserting that God had spoken this to him, would not be any proof to them of his divine mission.

Afterwards, "Moses answered and said, But behold they will not believe me, nor hearken to my voice; for they will say, The LORD hath not appeared unto thee. And the LORD said unto him, What is that in thy hand? And he said, a rod. And he said, cast it on the ground. And he cast it on the ground and it became a serpent; and Moses fled from before it. And the LORD said unto Moses, Put forth thine hand, and take it by the tail. And he put forth his hand, and caught it, and it became

* Ex. iii. 11, 12.

“ a rod in his hand, That they may believe that the LORD “ God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of “ Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee.
 “ And the LORD said furthermore unto him, Put now thy “ hand into thy bosom. And he put his hand into his bosom:
 “ and when he took it out, behold, it was lepreous as snow.
 “ And he said, Put thine hand into thy bosom again. And “ he put his hand into his bosom again; and plucked it out “ of his bosom, and, behold, it was turned again as his other “ flesh. And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe “ thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that “ they will believe the voice of the latter sign. And it shall “ come to pass, if they will not believe also these two signs, “ neither hearken to thy voice, that thou shalt take of the “ water of the river, and pour it out on the dry land; and “ the water which thou takest out of the river, shall become “ blood upon the dry land.”—“ And Moses and Aaron went “ and gathered together all the elders of the children of “ Israel. And Aaron spake all the words which the LORD “ had spoken unto Moses, and did the signs in the sight of “ the people. And the people believed.”* It must now be clearly ascertainable, whether the token, or the miracles, were the ground on which the people were required to believe Moses.

The sign to Moses that “ God would certainly be with “ him,” was a private and personal token: but his publick miracles proved that JEHOVAH had sent him, and established him as a prophet, both to Israel and to Pharaoh. Indeed, Pharaoh and the Egyptians were destroyed, and a most important part of Moses’s commission, as a prophet, was accomplished, before Israel came to Horeb. The same kind of reasoning which Mr. C. adopted concerning Jesus, may lead us to ask, Of what use then were the miracles of Moses to

* Ex. iv. 1--9. 29--31.

Pharaoh and the Egyptians? or the establishment of Moses as a prophet, or his subsequent miracles, to the rebels who afterwards perished by thousands? or to that whole generation which fell in the wilderness? Yet these miracles answered great and important purposes, both to Israel, to the surrounding nations, and to all subsequent generations, even to this day.

P. 29. l. 2. ‘Establish Moses, &c.’—L. 21. ‘All the Miracles, &c.’—Notwithstanding Moses’s establishment as a prophet at Horeb; the people, it seems, were so little satisfied respecting it, and so prone to murmur, if their desires were not immediately granted; that nothing but miracles of wrath could prevent their open rebellion against both the prophet, and God who sent him! This also shews, that the conduct of the Jews in rejecting Jesus, is no proof, that he was not the true Messiah: for, by exactly the same kind of evidence, it may be proved, that Moses was not a true prophet; and this is at least a valid argumentum ad hominem.

L. 32. ‘Now to make them all fit, &c.’—The people after all confessed, that they were not able to hear the word of God.*

L. 34, 35. ‘Became a whole nation, in one moment, prophets, &c.’—When the Lord appointed to Moses seventy assistants, he said “I will take of the Spirit, which is upon thee, and I will put it upon them.”—“And he took of the Spirit that was upon him, and gave unto the seventy elders.—“And Eldad and Medad prophesied in the camp.” “And Moses said, Would God that all the LORD’s people were prophets, and that the LORD would put his Spirit upon them.”† In this place alone, do we read of God’s “pouring out of his Spirit on Israel,” to make any of them prophets, and this only seventy out of the whole nation.

* Ex. xx. 19. Deut. v. 23—27. † Num. xi. 17. 24—29.

Moses's wish, according to Mr. C.'s account, would have been superfluous and absurd.

P. 30. l. 1. 'We find that afterwards, &c.'—Nothing is recorded in the scripture of this kind, concerning prophets in general; nor what entirely accords to it, respecting any particular prophet: but, as it does not affect the general argument, it does not require further notice. The same may be said of the rest of this page.

Let it here be distinctly observed, that Mr. C. admits the authenticity of the history, contained in the New Testament, concerning the ministry and miracles of Jesus, and of his apostles: at least he says nothing to the contrary, and he frequently appeals to it. Indeed, this is the only original history, extant in the world, of the introduction and establishment of Christianity. Neither friends nor enemies gave any other which has been preserved, and which can be referred to as authority. This is a most extraordinary, though little noticed, fact! The greatest revolution, in itself, and productive of by far the most extensive, important, and permanent effects, in the history of the human race; occupies scarcely any pages in the writings of original historians, except those of the New Testament: all else is tradition or report. These books were written by Christians; and no contemporary opposer ventured to publish a counter narrative: though the credit of the Jewish rulers, priests and scribes, and even that of pagan persecutors and philosophers, loudly demanded it of them! This is a testimony to the fidelity of the sacred historians of the New Testament, which is altogether without parallel. Even modern enemies to Christianity, are compelled to derive all their information from the evangelists themselves!

Let it be also observed, that Mr. C. does not attempt to deny the reality of the miracles, recorded as wrought by Jesus and his apostles; but ascribes them unreservedly to witchcraft and enchantment: 'All by enchantment.' (P. 27. l. 20.) This is exactly the ancient solution of the difficulty given by the Pharisees; and our Lord's answer to it, is worthy the consideration of moderns also, who retain it.*

Having premised these things, we proceed more directly to the question:—

HOW FAR, AND IN WHAT CASES, MIRACLES ARE A PROOF OF A DIVINE MISSION?

It is readily allowed, that 'bad and wicked men have wrought miracles;' (p. 31. l. 2, 3.) yea, real miracles, by the power of God: for to be a prophet, and to be a saint, or holy person, are quite distinct things. No doubt, Judas wrought miracles, as well as the other apostles: and our Lord assures us, that many instances will be made known at the day of judgment of miracles wrought in his name by "the workers of iniquity."†

It is also conceded, that wicked men, by various artifices of legerdemain, imposing on the senses of the ignorant, may perform many things, which appear to be miraculous; and the history of the church abounds with such "lying miracles," in which some knowledge of chemistry, or mechanics, or opticks, and other sciences; combining with the tricks of a juggler, among illiterate people, and those, who were not permitted closely to investigate what they saw, gave reputation to appearances, which passed for miracles; but in which neither divine power, nor diabolical operation, were at all concerned. This was clearly ascertained at the reformation from popery. It appears also to me undeniable, that by witchcraft and enchantment, the actual operation of evil spirits has been, in many instances, obtained: and thus supernatural effects have been produced; and the magicians of Egypt seem to have wrought their miracles, at least some of them, in this way; nor is it easy to say, which of the lying miracles of the antichristian church, have been wrought by human imposture, and which by Satanical influence.

* Matt. xii. 23—32.

† Matt. vii. 21—23.

In this view, however, it is worthy of notice, that the only formidable rival to Christianity, on earth, Mohammedism, was established without any publick miracles; and that Mohammed employs no small portion of the Koran, in framing excuses, for not giving signs and miracles in proof of his mission, and in intimidating those who demanded them. The only religions in the whole world, which so much as profess to have been at first introduced, and established, by publick miracles, wrought in the presence of powerful opposers, and demanding investigation from the most learned, potent, and sagacious of them, are that of Israel as contained in the Old Testament, and that of Jesus in the New. There never, in any age or place, was another introduced with this avowed claim. Miracles, said to have been wrought in support of a system already established, and possessed of authority; or by those, whose rank or superiority, in any respect, precluded or discouraged free examination; are widely different from those wrought during the feeble infancy of a new religion, in the midst of opposition, by men in other respects obscure, challenging investigation, and forcing opponents to say, “This is the finger of God;” “This man doeth many miracles;” “That a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all, and we cannot deny it:”* Thus driving them to persecution, and to calumniate the most undeniable miracles, as the effect of magick and enchantment.

It is further granted, that there may be cases, in which, those events which appear to us true miracles, are insufficient to prove a divine mission.—When the worship of the One living and true God alone had been established in Israel, by most stupendous miracles, and invincible evidences, no sign or miracle was to be considered, as any argument, to authorize the worship of idols: for it could not possibly outweigh, nay it could not be worthy of comparison with, the demonstration already given to the contrary; but must be considered as a temptation.*

* Ex. viii. 19. John xi. 47. Acts iv. 16.

If therefore real miracles could be wrought in support of any doctrine, manifestly and expressly contrary to “the oracles of God;” they would not prove the truth of that doctrine. But the Lord graciously so orders it, that careful examination has hitherto sufficed to distinguish the miracles, by which new impostures sprung up, almost like yearly Almanacks, to have their short notice, and the admiration of the superficial; and then, like old Almanacks, to be neglected and forgotten; from such miracles as introduced the Mosaick dispensation, and afterwards the religion of Christ. Yet each of these successive impostures deludes some, or many; and often disgraces the cause of truth, and seems to weaken the credibility of scripture, through the sanction given them by some ill-judging religious characters.

Were a few apparent, or even real miracles, the only proof, which Christians can adduce, in support of their holy religion: and could it be as easily proved, as it is confidently asserted, that this religion is subversive of that contained in the Old Testament; plausibility at least would be given to the arguments of a Jew against them. But it is observable, that amidst all the stupendous miracles, wrought by Jesus and his apostles, they every where appealed to the Old Testament; alledging that “thus it was written, and “thus it must be.”†

In this respect Christianity has an important advantage above the Mosaick dispensation, because, prophecies, during many ages, introduced it: and not only were all other particulars respecting the Messiah and his kingdom, his labo-

* Deut. xiii. 1—4.

† John v. 35—47.

rious suffering life, and his violent death as a sacrifice for our sins, and his glorious resurrection and ascension,* predicted even with minuteness, but his very miracles also were foretold.† Thus Jesus, when John Baptist sent to enquire of him, “Art thou He that cometh, or do we look for another?” answered, “Go, and shew John again, those things which ye do see and hear: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them.”‡ Whereas Moses could appeal to no preceding prophecies, as marking out any particulars of his mission.§

The religion of Moses, therefore, stands more singly on the demonstration of undeniable miracles, than that of Jesus does: and he, who allows that Jesus wrought the miracles recorded of him, and his apostles those recorded of them, and then says, ‘miracles are a poor and miserable defence,’ &c, (P. 26. l. 29, 30,) does what in him lieth to undermine the authority and divine mission of Moses, and to give advantage to infidel opposers of the whole scripture.

Let it be observed also, that the two miracles, which Mr. C. mentions, intimating, that Jesus should have wrought them, (P. 27. l. 22—24,) were not performed by Moses, but by Joshua and Elijah, after the religion of Moses had been fully established.||

If Moses had gone to Israel and to Pharaoh, exactly as he did in all other respects; if they had answered, “The LORD hath not appeared unto thee,” and demanded some proof of his mission; and, if he could have produced none, except the private token given to encourage his own faith, “This shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee,

* Ps. xvi. 8—10. lxxviii. 18. Is. liii. 4—12. Dan. ix. 24—27. Zech. xiii. 7.

† Is. xxix. 18. xxxv. 4—6.

‡ Is. lxi. 1—3. Matt. xi. 4—6.

Luke vii. 20—23.

§ Gen. xv. 13—16. Ex. xii. 40—42.

|| Josh. x. 12, 13. 1 Kings xviii. 22—38. 2 Kings i. 10—15.

“When thou hast brought forth this people out of Egypt, “ye shall serve God upon this mountain:”* it may, I suppose, be spoken confidently, that there would have been an end of the whole business; except that Pharaoh would have punished him as a deceiver, and have oppressed the people more severely, for forming designs of recovering their liberty. The token would have come too late, either to induce Pharaoh to let the people go, or Israel to venture on leaving Egypt.—But when, in proof that JEHOVAH had sent him, Moses gave the appointed miraculous signs to the people; and when, by the lifting up of his shepherd’s rod, or waving it, the waters of Egypt were turned into blood; and tremendous judgments denounced beforehand, followed one another in rapid succession, which were also removed at his word; the LORD God almighty bare witness to his mission; so that even Pharaoh and the Egyptians could not disprove it, or indeed doubt of it.

If, however, the magicians had been able, by their art, to remove each judgment at once, and to repair the damages of it, the case might have still remained doubtful: but when, after aping a few of his miracles, they were constrained to confess, “This is the finger of God;” when “the boil was on them, as well as on the other Egyptians,” and when they were driven away, defeated, and covered with ignominy: the difference between Moses, who spake in the name of JEHOVAH, and these impotent contemptible jugglers, was fully demonstrated; and “their folly was made “manifest to all men.”†

It is manifest, that Moses himself, and all the subsequent writers of the Old Testament, appeal to the miracles wrought in Egypt, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderness, as the foundation of their religion. Something has already been adduced on this topick, and I will not enlarge. “Hath

* Ex. iii. 12.

† 2 Tim. iii. 9.

“ God assayed to go and take him a nation from the midst “ of another nation, by temptations, by signs, and by won“ ders, and by war, and by a mighty hand, and by a “ stretched out arm, and by great terrors; according to all “ that the LORD your God did for you before your eyes?
 “ Unto thee it was shewed, that thou mightest know, that “ the LORD he is God,”*—“ How long will it be ere they “ believe me, for all the signs which I have shewed among “ them?”† These miracles are also represented as exciting convictions in all the neighbouring nations, which were not forgotten for ages afterwards.‡

It is readily allowed, that this was far from the only proof, that the Lord spake by Moses: and careful examiners find decisive internal evidence of his divine legation, pervading the whole of the books written by him. The sublime and truly rational views of the nature, perfections, and works of God; and the history of the creation of the world;
 the holy, just, and good law, which Moses promulgated; the excellent judgments, or political laws, which he enacted, compared with those of other ancient legislators, nay, with modern codes of law, even in Christian countries; the sacramental prefigurations, in the ritual law, of “good things to come;”
 and the prophecies contained in his writings, and either fulfilled in past events, or fulfilling at this day, especially in the state of Israel; are a few of the other conclusive proofs, that God spake by Moses.—His disinterestedness, and some laws and promises, which no politician would have committed himself upon, except conscious of delivering the word of God, § and even the obscurity of his own descendants render his divine mission illustrious. Yet the whole

* Deut. iv. 31, 35.

† Num. xiv. 11. Comp. Mark ix. 19.

John xii. 37. See also Num. xvi. 28—30. xvii. 2—10.

‡ Ex. xv.

14—16. Josh. ii. 9—11. 1 Sam. iv. 8.

§ Ex. xxxiv. 24. Lev. xxv.

20—22.

was introduced, and established by miracles; without which there would have been no opportunity of exhibiting the other evidences of his mission, or of calling the attention of Israel, or of mankind, to them.

In like manner, the holy nature of Christianity, in which all, that has been noticed of the perfections and holy law of God, is still more clearly exhibited; and the success of such a holy religion, in this wicked and unholy world, by such means and instruments as have been considered; with innumerable internal proofs, and prophecies already fulfilled, and fulfilling at this day; not to dwell again on the prophecies of the Old Testament fulfilled in these events; constitute a full proof, and moral demonstration, that Christianity is from God, even apart from the miracles of Jesus and his apostles: nay, the prevalence and continuance of his religion to this day, is more wonderful than any external miracle, or all of them united. The tendency also of Christianity, yea, its actual effects, shewing that if it universally prevailed, not in name and form, but in power and efficacy; if men did indeed repent, believe, love God, and love one another, according to its peremptory requirements, universal peace and felicity must be the consequence; this, I say, proclaims its divine original.

Yet the whole was introduced, and must have been introduced, by miracles, to excite the attention of the prejudiced Jews, and of a careless world; to force a temporary conviction at least, even on its opponents; and to procure the preachers a patient hearing from those whom they addressed. Without this, no other evidences could have been so brought before men, as to have obtained a fair investigation. In this respect, the case of the Mosaick, and that of the Christian dispensations are entirely similar.

The nature of our Lord's miracles also should be considered.—Mr. C. seems indeed favourable to tremendous and splendid miracles: and to “turn water into blood” was more suited to the law given by Moses; but to “turn “water into wine” better accorded to him, by whom “grace “and truth came” to mankind. The power which raised the dead, in many instances, was doubtless sufficient to strike dead the living opponents; and certainly, it ought not to be an objection to our Lord’s miracles, that he did not inflict, I will not say such miraculous judgments, as desolated Egypt, but such as slew rebellious Israelites by thousands and ten thousands, in the wilderness. When Jesus merely said, “I am he,” his numerous and powerful assailants “went backward, and fell to the ground;”* and he shewed that his mild conduct in this respect did not arise from want of power. The special miracles wrought by Jesus, which accord to the predictions of the prophets, should not be overlooked.—No prophet or apostle, except the Lord Jesus, ever “opened the eyes of the blind,” either of those who had been before known to be blind, or born blind.† Nothing of this appears in the history of the Old Testament, or in the Acts of the Apostles. The same may be said of his “unstopping the ears of the deaf, and giving “speech to the dumb.” “He hath done all things well; he “maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak.”‡ Not to dwell upon the suitableness of these miracles, to be emblems of his salvation; it is plain that the predictions referred to never were accomplished but in him; and nothing could more explicitly point out the promised Messiah, for “unto many that were blind he gave sight.” (χαρισσατο το ελεπειν).

He healed all manner of diseases, cleansed the lepers, raised the dead by a word spoken; rebuked a legion of evil spirits, and drove them out; “rebuked the winds and

* John xviii. 3—6.

† Is. xxxv. 5, 6. John ix. 32.

‡ Mark vii. 32. Comp. Ex. iv. 11. Luke xxi. 15. Acts xxvi. 16—18.

“waves” in a violent storm, “and there was a great calm;” “walked upon the waves of the sea:” and, to complete the whole, he shewed that he had “power to lay down his “life and power to take it again.”

This last miracle was the grand sign given to that generation. It was predicted by the prophets; and so clearly foretold by Jesus himself, from the beginning of his ministry, that it was well known to the scribes, priests, and rulers: yet all their precautions were vain; the body was gone, and their silence, after the bold and explicit testimony of the apostles to his resurrection, with the unqualified accusation of them, as the murderers of the Messiah, “the Prince of life,” was a clear confession that they could adduce nothing against it. The testimony of twelve men of sober minds, good characters, and most evidently disinterested, who had intimately known him for several years, and ate and drank with him after his resurrection, and saw him ascend towards heaven, was enough to prove any fact, not wholly impossible in the nature of things. In this testimony they all persevered, without one discordant voice, amidst labours, hardships, and persecutions, even until death; and most of them sealed it with their blood. Besides their testimony, very many others bare witness also; and the apostle Paul, several years after, could appeal to the greater part of five hundred persons, who saw Jesus after his resurrection. But it was deemed proper, to put the matter beyond all reasonable doubt; therefore, as if no human testimony was sufficient in such a cause, “God himself bare witness with “signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts “of the Holy Ghost.”* The gift of tongues, enabling unlearned men to speak fluently, and understand readily, the languages of all the nations, to whom they addressed themselves; every miracle which the apostles wrought in the

* Heb. ii. 4.

“name of Jesus of Nazareth;” every instance, in which they conferred the gift of tongues and power of working miracles on others, by the laying on of their hands; not only increased the number of witnesses to the resurrection of Jesus, but was the attestation of God himself to their testimony. Either the resurrection of our Lord must be disproved; or it must stand confirmed, I had almost said, beyond demonstration, that “Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God.”

Impostors have made many vain pretensions: but did any man, from the beginning of the world to this day, having rested the proof of his mission on this ground, ‘Put me to death; and if I do not rise again on the third day, I am a deceiver:’ I say, did any man ever establish such a demonstration of his mission, except Jesus of Nazareth? Why talk of magick and enchantment? What could these do in such a case as this?

It appears then, that miracles, publick, undeniable miracles, wrought in the name of God, (as an express proof and confirmation of a doctrine not manifestly contrary to preceding revelations in essential matters, and destitute of human support; but vehemently opposed by the powerful, sagacious, and learned, and the multitude,) are one grand evidence that God sent him who wrought them, and by them God himself attests the testimony; that they introduce and make way for all other proofs; and that when such changes, as Christianity introduced, are to be effected in consequence, by unarmed instruments, and without human power or violence, they are almost, if not absolutely, indispensable.

When only a few of our Lord’s miracles had been performed, they drew from a ruler and teacher in Israel, the confession, in his own name and that of his company; “Rabbi, we know that thou art a Teacher come from God:” “for no man can do the miracles that thou doest, except

“God be with him.”* “Many of the people,” also, “believed on him, and said, When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles, than this man doeth?”† And the man born blind spoke unanswerably, when he said, “Herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes;—since the world began was it not heard, that any man opened the eyes of one who was born blind: if this man were not of God, he could do nothing.”‡ The council also felt the energy of this proof, after he had called Lazarus out of the grave—“What do we? for this man doeth many miracles; and if we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him.”§ After his resurrection, the testimony of his apostles produced the most embarrassing difficulties to the opposing rulers: and they were induced to put the cause on another kind of trial, when Gamaliel had counselled, after introducing apposite examples, “Refrain from these men, and let them alone; for if this counsel and work be of men, it will come to nought; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found to fight against God.”|| According to the reasoning of this prudent opponent, trial has been made for much above seventeen hundred years; and because Christianity is “of God,” neither Jews nor Gentiles, neither open enemies, nor treacherous friends, have been able to overturn it, to this very day. After all, no other religion, from the beginning of the world, except that of Moses, and that of Jesus, ever claimed to have been introduced and established by publick miracles, as the testimony of God to the teacher and his doctrine. Popish miracles, heathen miracles, and Mohammedan miracles, accord in this, that they were wrought, or asserted to be wrought, in favour of a religion already

* John iii. 1, 2.

† John vii. 31.

‡ John ix. 29—34.

§ John xi. 47, 48.

|| Acts v. 33—40.

established and possessed of authority, or publick favour; privately, among friends, or at most before those, who dared not, or were not able, to investigate their pretensions. There are, therefore, no other claimants in this cause; though some men speak, as if such claims were quite common things! The miracles of Moses, and of Jesus, were as much superior to all the effects of magick and enchantment, as well as to those of human imposture, “as the heavens are above the earth. They stand on the same ground, and must be supported by the same arguments, and share the same fate. So that, if either Jew or Christian could succeed, in discrediting the miracles of Moses, or of Jesus, as God’s attestation to the divine mission of either of them; every shrewd opposer of both, would perceive his advantage, and fight him with his own weapons: nay, the attempt itself would tend to universal scepticism.

P. 31. l. 4. ‘The authorities, &c.’ The quotations, though inaccurate on this page, do not affect the main question. But if the Messiah is to be only an earthly, and not a spiritual Deliverer; what connection can his coming, and the restoration of Israel, have with “the circumcision of the heart to love the LORD?” (L. 28—31.) Is not this a spiritual blessing? Or what does Mr. C. suppose to be meant by it? Does he, with many writers concerning Christian baptism, suppose the sign and the thing signified to be the same, or inseparably connected with each other?

P. 31. last l. P. 32. l. 1. ‘Let every one observe, &c.’ —The law of Moses, undeniably, contains three distinct kinds of precepts: moral, ceremonial, and judicial. The moral law is contained in the ten commandments; summed up in the two great commandments of “loving God with all the heart,” and “our neighbours as ourselves;” and explained and enforced by every precept or exhortation in scripture, requiring piety, justice, temperance, inward purity, truth, and love.—The ceremonial law comprises all instituted worship, and the whole of the external observances, respecting sacrifices, festivals, distinction of meats, purifications, and various things; neither arising from the nature of God and man, and mens' relation to God and one another, nor previously obligatory.—The judicial laws were the magistrate's rule of political government. Of the two last, it may be questioned whether they be now in force, or not: but, it is manifest, that they have not been, as to the most essential parts of them, obeyed, since the destruction of the temple, and the dispersion of the Jews; nor can they be obeyed, in the present state of the nation. The ceremonial institutions, not being previously obligatory, might be abolished by the same authority as instituted them. Christians consider them, “as having been “shadows of good things to come;” and having now answered their end, and received their accomplishment, as disannulled, and of no validity: and it appears to us, that this was intimated with sufficient clearness by the ancient prophets.* Several of the prophets, also, allowed of deviations from the ritual law; and set the example of them, with acceptance from God, in peculiar circumstances: as Elijah and Elisha, and the other prophets, who were sent to the ten tribes; and who neither went themselves, nor required the pious remnant of Israelites, to go up to Jerusalem to worship; and they always marked strongly the superiority of moral to ritual obedience.† Now that, which is inferior in excellency, cannot be of the same nature, and the same immutable obligation, as that which is superior, and to which it must give place, when they

* Ps. xl. 6—8. Comp. Heb. x. 1—9. Jer. xxxi. 31—34. Comp. Heb. viii. 8—13.

† Ps. l. 23. li. 16, 17. Is. i. 10--18. lxvi. 3. Jer. vii. 21--23. Hos. vi. 6. Am. v. 21—24.

interfere with each other. — “ I desired mercy, and not sacrifice.”*

The judicial laws were framed, with an equity, wisdom, mildness, and benevolence, which marks their divine original: but they were so specially accommodated to Israel, as under a Theocracy, that they could not be adapted to the political government of nations, in different circumstances; though the spirit of them might be very advantageously infused into, perhaps, every code of laws on earth.

But the moral law is unchangeable, as to its substantial requirements, in its own nature; the gospel establishes it, in its full authority, both by the obedience and atonement of Immanuel, by giving it as a rule of duty to all called Christians, and by writing it, in the heart of all, who are really Christians; thus leading them to love and delight in it, to repent of every transgression of it; and to breathe out the constant prayer, “ Oh, that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes !”

Many professed Christians, and teachers, speak of ‘ the law being abolished,’ and a better, a new and mitigated law, introduced by Christianity: but, as I believe this to be, the most general of all heresies, and one of the most destructive both to law and gospel, I shall only say concerning it, “ Let Baal plead for himself.” The notion undermines the very doctrine of redemption, and hides its glory; it makes void the holy, just, and good law of God; and gives the Jew one of his most plausible arguments against Christianity.

P. 32. l. 10. ‘ The LAW of Moses is perfect.’—Each of these laws cannot be perfect, in exactly the same sense, or, the one never could have been preferred before the other. Each of them is perfect, as entirely suited for the purpose, for which God intended it. But if God intended the moral law, as the complete and unchangeable standard of holiness, and rule of duty, to all his worshippers under every dispensation, according to which also he will judge the world: if he intended the ritual law, as a temporary rule for instituted worship, a wall of separation to preserve Israel from apostacy to idolatry, and being lost among idolaters, by familiar intercourse with them; and as a shadow of good things to come: and if he intended the judicial law for the political law of Israel, under the theocracy; the perfection of each, to answer these several intentions, could not be precisely the same.—Now absolute perfection must be entirely the same, wherever it exists; that is, in God alone: relative perfection, in the fullest sense, belongs to all his works, as he made them; not more to an angel than to Adam, or the lower creation, or any part of it.—“God saw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good.”* “As for God, his work is perfect:” yet the perfection of the human body does not consist in all being one member; but in the completeness and symmetry of the whole, consisting of many members, each perfectly fitted to its place and office.

* Hos. vi. 6.

P. 32. l. 23—32. ‘I have produced, &c.’ Perfectly satisfied with the testimonies from Moses and from David, when soberly interpreted, we have no desire to bring forward any witnesses to oppose them. If indeed there were any contrariety, we might point out Immanuel, and say, “Behold a greater than Moses, than David is here!” “I am one that bear witness of myself; and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me:” the apostles also concur in his testimony; and so doth “the Holy Spirit, which God hath given to them that obey him.”† But there is no

* Gen. i. 31.
Acts v. 32.

† Matt. xii. 41, 42. John viii. 18—19. xv. 26, 27.

contrariety; yea, rather there is the most entire coincidence.

P. 32, last line. p. 33. l. 1. ‘These two tables contained the whole law.’ Then the ceremonial and judicial law form no part of that, in behalf of which Mr. C. is pleading; for the ten commandments alone were written on the two tables of stone. And, in that case, I have no further controversy with him, on this part of the subject.

P. 33. l. 2. ‘In the ten, &c.’ I should probably labour in vain, did I attempt to advise Christians, to count the letters of the ten commandments; and to compare them with the number of precepts, of every sort and kind, in the law of Moses. Will not reasonable Jews allow this to be egregious trifling? “How forcible are right words! but “what doth your arguing prove?”* If indeed God, or Moses, had told us that each letter in the ten commandments was the representative of a precept in the law, we ought to have attended to it: but asserting that it is so, without proof, or with no proof but from “the tradition of the elders,” requires no attention. The only sense, in which the ten commandments comprised the whole law, moral, ceremonial, and judicial, is this:—it virtually required every one to obey each ritual, or instituted appointment, for the time in which it continued to be in force; as a part of the general obedience to the law of God: but if the same authority, which instituted, afterwards abolished the institution, that obligation ceased.

Let it, however, be carefully observed, that a law, in every sense as perfect as it can be, is not all which a sinner wants, in order to salvation or happiness, (p. 33. l. 7—9.) “If there had been a law given, which could have “given life, verily righteousness should have been by the “law: but the scripture hath shut up all under sin.”† An act of parliament, however good, cannot meet the case of a criminal exposed to condemnation, or already condemned for breaking it; or supersede the necessity of a pardon from the king. Mr. C. himself observes, that in the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy, 'is pronounced the blessing for obedience and the curses for disobedience.' Now the law cannot be sufficient for the happiness of him, whom it curses for disobedience; the law in itself says nothing concerning forgiveness; this must come from the mercy of the Law-giver. "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered:"* and "the circumcision of the heart," by which transgressors are brought to repent and turn to God, and love and serve him, is the work of his special grace, according to the new covenant, by which he "writes the law in our hearts," while "our sins and iniquities he remembers no more."† We suppose that the ritual law, rightly understood, contained the gospel of mercy and grace, as proposed to Israel; which when Christ came, and after his crucifixion, was virtually abrogated: and plain testimonies, invitations, and promises, made known the way of salvation to mankind. As 'a law of works,' the gospel itself cannot save transgressors, any more than the law of Moses can. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;" yea, every man has broken his own law, that which he, however erroneously, has proposed to himself as the law of God; and thus he is condemned by his own conscience and heart: and if our "heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart and knoweth all things!"

* Job. vi. 25.

† Gal. iii. 21, 22. Comp. Ps. cxxx. 3, 4. cxliii. 2.

We do not then say, that God has by Jesus given a new and better law: but that "he is the Mediator of a better covenant," than that made with Israel, by the typical mediation of Moses. It is manifest, that God made a covenant with Abraham, of which circumcision was the outward seal; but of which the Aaronick priesthood and most of the ceremonies were no part: and surely the apostles argument is conclusive, “The covenant which was confirmed,” (that is, with Abraham) “of God in Christ; the law which was four hundred and thirty years after, could not disannul.”* This covenant, so manifestly distinct from the Sinai Covenant, we suppose to have comprised for substance what the prophets, and the writers of the New Testament, speak of, as “a new and everlasting covenant.”

* Ps. xxxii. 1, 2.

† Jer. xxxi. 31—34.

But as the new covenant, in various circumstances, differed from that made with Abraham; it is generally spoken of, in appropriate language, distinguishing it from the national covenant with Israel. The passage from Jeremiah, which the apostle produces and argues from, in an unanswerable manner, has been considered:† and the same prophet proposes the subject in similar language in a subsequent chapter. “I will give them one heart and one way that they may fear me for ever; for the good of them, and of their children after them: I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me.”‡ This must certainly be distinct from the Sinai-Covenant, in which none of these things are engaged for.—Thus Ezekiel also; “I will remember my covenant with thee, in the days of thy youth, and I will establish with thee an everlasting covenant.—Then shalt thou remember thy ways and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, the elder and the younger,” (Samaria and Sodom,) “and I will give them unto thee, for daughters, but not by thy covenant.”§ “God will remember his covenant with Israel;” “He will establish unto Israel an

* Gal. iii. 16, 17.

† Jer. xxxi. 31—34. Heb. viii. 8.—13. x. 15—18.

‡ Jer. xxxii. 39, 40.

§ Ez. xvi. 60, 61.

“everlasting covenant:” and he will give the Gentiles “to them for daughters, but not by thy covenant.”—What does this mean; but that God will restore Israel, not by the national covenant, but by another distinct covenant, including the Gentiles also? For substance, this was the Abrahamick covenant; * more explicitly proposed by the Messiah, as “the new covenant in his blood,” and of which he is the Surety and Mediator.—Thus again, speaking of the restoration of Israel; “My Servant David shall be their Prince for ever; and I will make a covenant of peace with them; and it shall be an everlasting covenant with them, &c.”† Is it not evident, that this “covenant of peace,” which God will make with Israel, on their restoration, and under which “David shall be their Prince for ever,” is entirely distinct from that covenant, which God made with their fathers, at Mount Sinai?

In like manner, God by Isaiah says to the Messiah: “I will give thee for a Covenant of the people, for a Light of the Gentiles.”‡—And again, “I will preserve thee, and give thee for a Covenant of the people, to establish the earth, &c.”§ And again, “Incline your ear, and come to me, hear and your souls shall live: and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David.”|| Whether we understand this literally of David,¶ or figuratively of the Messiah; it must denote a covenant distinct from the national covenant of Israel; and one which is made through the Messiah with individuals, who ‘obey the calling,’ and with no others.—Again, “And the Redeemer shall come to Zion; and unto them who turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the LORD, as for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the LORD, &c.”—Now, this

* Ps. cv. 8—10.

† Ez. xxxvii. 25—27.

‡ Is. xlii. 6.

§ Is. xlix. 8. See also liv. 10.

|| Is. lv. 3.

¶ 2 Sam. xiii. 5. Ps. lxxxix. 4, 5.

covenant made with a remnant of penitent Jews, at the coming of the Redeemer, (or at any other time,) could not be the same, with the national covenant made with Israel at Mount Sinai." In like manner, also Gabriel says to Daniel, concerning the Messiah, "he shall confirm the covenant with "many for one week."* Now this covenant which was confirmed "with many," while the rest were given up to desolations, could not be the national covenant of Sinai.—In fact, in the Old Testament, as well as the New, the covenant made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and not the Sinai Covenant, is almost always referred to, whenever the promised mercies to Israel are spoken of.†

We therefore conclude, that the Messiah is "the Mediator "of a new and a better covenant," than that made with Israel at Mount Sinai, promising far more valuable blessings to those with whom it is made, and securing them in a far more irrevocable and unalterable manner: being for substance the same, with the covenant made with Abraham, in behalf of himself and his Seed, even Christ, and confirmed by the oath, which was sworn unto him: including also the Gentiles, who are grafted into the good olive-tree by faith in the Messiah, and so "partake of the root and fatness of "the good olive-tree."‡—But as this is proposed, in a new, and clearer manner, and its extent, and blessings, and security, are more explicitly exhibited; it is generally called "the new covenant," as distinguished from the Sinai Covenant. I forbear to quote the New Testament on this subject; except as I introduce it, to shew what our views on this subject are, and on what grounds we consider them warranted by clear testimonies from the Old Testament. This part of the subject is wholly overlooked by Mr. C. but this new covenant, is a far different thing from a new law. This I suppose St. Paul meant, when he said, “not without law to God, but under the law to Christ.” (εὑνομασ Χριστω.)*

* Dan. ix. 27.

† Deut. iv. 31. viii. 18. 2 Kings xiii. 23. 1 Chr. xvi. 15—18. Neh. ix. 8. Ps. cy. 9, 10. Micah vii. 20. Luke i. 54, 55. 72—75.

‡ Rom. xi. 16—24. Heb. vi. 13—18.

We indeed read in the New Testament of “fulfilling the law of Christ:” but I apprehend the apostle meant, the new commandment requiring Christians to love one another for his sake, and according to the pattern of his love to them.† However, the constant reference of the apostles to the moral law of ten commandments as the rule of our duty, sufficiently proves, that Jesus did not intend to abolish the holy, just, good, and spiritual law of the Old Testament, to substitute one of a milder and more indulgent nature in its place.‡

P. 33. 1. 12. ‘This law cannot make happy, &c.’—No law can make happy him who has broken it.—“Blessed are they that keep judgment, and he that doeth righteousness at all times.” “He that doeth these things shall live in them.” “The soul that sinneth, it shall die.”§ “Where is then the blessedness?” “Blessed is he whose iniquity is forgiven, and whose sin is covered.” “Blessed is the man, to whom the LORD imputeth not iniquity.” But this properly belongs, not to the law but to the gospel;|| for “Without shedding of blood there is no remission.”

L. 19, 20. ‘He ought to have, &c.’—True Christians never think of prescribing to God what he ought to do: it is their question, “What must I do to be saved?”—“Lord what wouldst thou have me to do?”

L. 22. ‘In number seventy, &c.’—It is not very easy to make out the number of the distinct families, which sprang

* 1 Cor. ix. 21. † John xiii. 34. Gal. vi. 2. 1 John ii. 7, 8.

‡ Rom. vii. 12. xiii. 8—10. Gal. v. 14. Eph. vi. 1, 2. Jam. ii. 8—11.

§ Ps. cvi. 3. Ez. xviii. 4. xx. 11. 21. Luke x. 25—29

|| Ps. xxxii. 1, 2. cxxx. 4, 5. Rom. iv. 6—8.

from Noah's three sons; as any one will find, if he attempt to be accurate, and to distinguish exactly between their immediate and their more remote descendants. I do not think the matter deserving of a laboured investigation: but as Mr. C. purposes to build much upon it, he ought well to secure the foundation; else the whole superstructure will fall to the ground on the slightest assault.

L. 29, 30. 'Lest we be scattered, and God said, they shall be scattered.'—Scatter is not a very appropriate word for such a regular allotment, as Mr. C. supposes was made of the earth, to these seventy families at this time.* Jacob said of Simeon and Levi, "I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel."† And God declared by Moses, "I said, I would scatter them into corners."—"I would make the remembrance of them to cease from among men."‡ And Israel is now scattered among the nations: but could Joshua, when he divided the promised land among the tribes of Israel, be said to scatter them in Canaan?

L. 31. 'The heavenly Sanhedrin, &c.' As the scripture reveals nothing of this Sanhedrin and their proceedings; I must consider the whole as a mere fable, and class them with the legends of popery; that especially, which gives the several countries of the world, to different saints, who are the special patrons of them: and who, I suppose, go to war with one another, when these nations choose to engage in war; nay, with God himself, when they war against his chosen people! Thus St. James is the patron saint of Spain, St. George of England, St. Patrick of Ireland, St. Dennis of France.—The virgin Mary, I have lately heard, is now substituted in the place of the latter. We require THE WORD OF GOD, not the dreams of men:

* Gen. xi. 3—9. † Gen. xlix. 7. ‡ Lev. xxvi. 33. Deut. iv. 27. xxx. 3. xxxii. 26.

“What is the chaff to the wheat, saith the LORD?”* There is not the least ground in scripture, for supposing any such regular allotment of the countries, to the several families descended from Noah. The greatest part of the earth was to them terra incognita, an unknown country. A succession of most stupendous miracles must have occurred, even in many respects far greater, than that of Israel’s deliverance from Egypt and settlement in Canaan; in making known to each of these families the distant, unknown, and uncultivated country allotted to it; in prevailing on them to leave the rest of mankind, and all the cultivated parts of the world, to go in quest of this unknown land; and in conducting them, some to one region, and some to another; several of them to the most remote districts of the four continents; and also to the islands of the sea, before, as far as we know, ships were in use.—To raise such an hypothesis as this, from the two verses in the eleventh of Genesis on this subject, may prove ingenuity; but it must fall, and

‘Like the baseless fabrick of a vision,

‘Leave not a wreck behind.’

God was pleased to scatter mankind: he knew where each tribe or family would eventually settle; and he left matters to their course, according to the usual methods of his providence. This sufficed, as far as the intended inheritance of Israel was concerned;† and we have no further information of his purposes.

P. 34. l. 33. ‘The lot of God, &c.’ (L. 18.)—God, then, did not choose Abraham and his posterity to be his portion;‡ but the heavenly Sanhedrin settled it by lot. (P. 33. l. 31—34.) But what is the lot? “The lot is cast into

* Jer. xxiii. 25—29.

† Dan. xxxii. 8.

‡ Deut. vii. 6, 7.

Neh. ix. 7. Is. xli. 8, 9. xlv. 1.

“the lap, but the whole disposing of it is of the LORD.”* The heart revolts and shudders, at the narration of the great dispensations of the infinite God, in such language, as hardly suits even the more important concerns of puny mortals.

Last line but one. ‘One good family:’ ‘a right to his oracles:’ (P. 35. l. 7.) ‘an act of justice.’ (L. 12.) I only note these expressions, that they may not escape the reader’s attention. At present, I desire the reader to recollect, if he can, any thing of similar language on the subject in the scripture; and I quote a passage or two, suited to convey other ideas of the transaction: “Speak not in “thine heart,—for my righteousness the LORD hath brought “me in to possess this land.—Not for thy righteousness, nor “for the uprightness of thy heart, dost thou go in to “possess this land: but for the wickedness of these nations
“the LORD doth drive them out from before thee; and “that he may perform the word, which the LORD sware “unto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.—Under“stand, therefore, that the LORD thy God giveth thee “not this good land to possess it for thy righteousness, for “thou art a stiff-necked people.”—“Ye have been rebel“lious against the LORD, from the day that I knew you.”† —“In the day when I chose Israel, and lifted up my hand “unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and made myself “known to them in the land of Egypt.”—“I said unto “them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his “eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt;
“I am the LORD your God. But they rebelled against “me, and would not hearken unto me; they did not cast “away every man the abominations of their eyes, neither “did they forsake the idols of Egypt: then I said, I will “pour out my fury to accomplish mine anger in the midst

* Prov. xvi. 33.

† Deut. ix. 4—7. 24.

“of the land of Egypt. But I wrought for my name’s sake.”*—“And ye shall remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall lothe yourselves in your own sight, for all your evils that ye have committed. And ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I have wrought with you for my name’s sake; not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the LORD God.”† The man, who claims of God what is justly due to him, shall have it “without mercy.” But God confers his favours on those, who allow that they do not deserve them. As I cannot understand, so I do not stay to enquire, in what sense ‘the lot of God was in number, as much as that of the seventy angels.’ (P. 34. l. 30.)

P. 35. l. 28. ‘They are called and invited by the word of the Lord, &c.’—Does this mean, that without circumcision, or being proselyted to the observance of the ritual law, men may share the benefits of Israel? If it do, it is a concession, which I did not expect to meet with; but the words, no law, no promise, seem to confine it to those who are fully proselyted.

P. 36. l. 30. ‘Here is the calling, &c.’—Are then no more Gentiles to share these blessings, than can dwell among the Jews and Israel in the land of promise? This, I fear, will in great measure disannul the former concession; for the land of Canaan can hold a very small part of the Gentiles, that is, the inhabitants of the globe, along with Israel.—It is, however, proper to note the assertion, that Abraham was forty-eight years old, when the earth was divided. (P. 34. l. 10.)

We find in Genesis, that “unto Eber were born two sons: the name of the one was Peleg; for in his days

* Ez. xx. 5—9.

† Ez. xx. 43, 44.

“was the earth divided.”* The word Peleg signifies division. According to the chronology, calculated from the fifth and the eleventh, of Genesis, Peleg was born about A. M. 1757. Terah, the father of Abraham, descended from Peleg by Reu, Serug, and Nahor, was born about A. M. 1878. Terah died at the age of 205 years, and his son Abraham was then seventy five years old;† so that he was born when Terah was 130: about A. M. 2008; or 251 years after Peleg was born: but Peleg lived in all, no more than 239 years.‡—Peleg died A. M. 1996. Abraham, according to Moses, was born A. M. 2008.—This suffices to shew, that general assertions from tradition, when compared with the scripture, are often detected to be false, and are always uncertain.—Probably, Peleg’s name was given him, about the time of his birth, which occurred 251 years before that of Abraham.

L. 14. ‘He cursed them, &c.’ The Psalm, from which Mr. C. adduces the words of Abraham’s curse, “Destroy, O Lord, and divide their tongues,” is expressly ascribed to David, in the Hebrew Bible, after the manner of the other Psalms written by him.§ It is generally allowed to have been composed during Absalom’s rebellion, and to relate to Ahitophel.||

P. 36. l. 11. ‘For he who will be a sharer, &c.’ This hint should be carefully observed; as it seems to be overlooked in great measure, in the following parts of the publication. Perhaps, however, it is exclusively meant of proselytes from the Gentiles, and not of Israelites by birth.

P. 36. last line but one. ‘THE MESSIAH’S KINGDOM IS NOT SPIRITUAL, BUT ABSOLUTELY EARTHLY.’

IS THE KINGDOM OF THE MESSIAH SPIRITUAL, OR ABSOLUTELY EARTHLY?

* Gen. x. 25.

† Gen. xi. 32. xii. 4.

‡ Gen. xi. 18, 19.

§ Ps. lv. Title.

|| Ps. lv. 9—15.

I introduce this part of our subject, by forming Mr. C's assertion into a question, which I purpose to discuss.

Last line. 'In the last chapter of Ezekiel, &c.' It would be easy to shew, that the strictly literal interpretation of Ezekiel's vision, including the last nine chapters, is attended by very great, if not absolutely insurmountable difficulties. It is generally allowed to be one of the most obscure portions in the whole scripture; I apprehend, the most obscure of all. Various opinions have been formed respecting the times and events to which it relates: but the order in which it follows the predictions of 'the Restoration of Israel,' and the slaughter of those powerful opposers, predicted under the names Gog and Magog; its coincidence, in this respect, with the New Testament predictions of the establishment of the millennium, after the terrible destruction of all opposers;* and, in addition to all, its very obscurity leads me to conclude, that it relates to events yet future, and subsequent to the conversion and 'Restoration of Israel.' But I am fully persuaded that nothing, previous to its fulfilment, will enable any man to know, how far it should be understood literally, and how far figuratively. The city, (which is never called Jerusalem,) according to the admeasurement assigned to it, would be forty miles square: and the land, (which is never called Canaan,) of far larger dimensions, than that divided by Joshua. Exactly the same proportion is assigned to each tribe, without any difference as to numbers; and each portion is stated as extended directly across the country. I only hint these things, as obvious difficulties to the strictly literal interpretation; and to shew how little certainty there can be in our reasonings from this obscure unfulfilled prophecy.

I have already observed, and desire again to point out to the reader; that 'the Restoration of Israel' is, neither in Ezekiel, nor in any of the prophets, directly connected with the coming of the Messiah: but if his coming be spoken of, something is constantly introduced, between the mention of it and the prophecy of Israel's restoration.—Thus in Isaiah, the calling of the Gentiles is introduced between the coming of the Messiah, and the Restoration of Israel.* Thus in Amos, the same order is observed.†—But in very many prophecies, the coming of the Messiah is not at all mentioned: He is supposed to have come, and to have set up his kingdom; and at length Israel receives him, or submits to him, and is restored.‡—The prophecy of Jeremiah seems more like an exception to this statement, than any other:§ yet the days of the Restoration of Israel, are marked distinctly, as subsequent to his coming. It may also be observed, that the coming of the Messiah is, in several prophecies, closely connected with judgments on the Jews, as the immediate consequence; which is wholly inconsistent with the restoration of the nation being the immediate consequence.||

* Notes, Ez. xxxix. xl. xlviii.—Rev. xix. xx. Family Bible by the author.

I would however most especially observe, as connected with the present question, that 'the Restoration of Israel' is uniformly connected with the promise of spiritual blessings: if forgiveness of sins, and renewal of the heart to holiness, be spiritual blessings. It will, I believe, be difficult to find any clear exception to this arrangement. Thus Moses connects that event with their confessing their sins, "their uncircumcised hearts being humbled; and their accepting the punishment of their sin."—And let it be here noted, that the Lord says, "Then I will remember my covenant," "with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham."¶—The Abrahamick, not the Sinai-covenant is pointed out.

* Is. xi. 10—16. † Am. ix. 11—15. ‡ Ez. xxxiv. 23—31.
 xxxvi. 24—28. Hos. iii. 4, 5. § Jer. xxiii. 5—8. || Dan. ix.
 24—27. Zec. ix. 9, 10. xiii. 7—9. Mal. iii. 1—5. ¶ Lev. xxvi. 40—42.

Again, predicting of the present dispersion of Israel :
 “ But if from thence thou shalt seek the LORD thy God, “ thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart
 “ and with all thy soul. When thou art in tribulation, and “ all these things are come upon thee in the latter days;
 “ if thou turn to the LORD thy God, and shalt be obedient “ to his voice, (for the LORD thy God is a merciful God,) “ he will not forsake thee, nor destroy thee; nor forget the “ covenant of thy fathers, which he sware unto them.”*— Observe again, “ the covenant of thy fathers, which he “ sware unto them.”† The Sinai Covenant was not con- firmed with an oath.

But whence does this conduct of the dispersed Israelites arise?—Moses, speaking concerning the same events, says,
 “ The LORD thy God will circumcise thine heart to love
 “ the LORD thy God, with all thy heart.”‡

It would be far too prolix to adduce the other passages, which connect the Restoration of Israel with spiritual blessings; and I must only refer the reader to them.§ And let those, who contend for an absolutely earthly kingdom, produce those prophecies, in which this connection cannot be traced; if indeed any such can be found. If then the Restoration of Israel be seldom, if ever, immediately connected with the coming of the Messiah; if his coming be sometimes predicted in connection with judgments on the Jewish nation; and if ‘the Restoration of Israel’ be uniformly predicted in connection with spiritual blessings to be poured out on the nation: we shall understand what estimate we ought to make of the assertion; that “ THE KINGDOM OF
 “ THE MESSIAH IS NOT SPIRITUAL, BUT ABSOLUTELY

* Deut. iv. 29—31.

† Gen. xxii. 16, 17. Ps. cv. 8—10.

Luke i. 72—74. Heb. vi. 14—18.

‡ Deut. xxx. 6.

§ Is. xi. 11—16. xii. 1—3. lix. 20, 21. Jer. xxxi. 31—36. xxxii. 39—41.

Ez. xi. 17—20. xxxvi. 24—28. Hos. xiv. Mic. vii. 15—20. Zeph. iii.

13—20. Zech. xii. 10—14.

“EARTHLY:” especially as the kingdom of the Messiah and the Restoration of Israel are constantly considered by the writer, as inseparably united.

P. 37. l. 10. ‘One Shepherd, &c.’ We Christians are apt to think, that invaluable spiritual blessings are implied in the title of SHEPHERD, as used concerning the Messiah, in several of these prophecies: and we suppose, that this is grounded on many parts of the Old Testament, as well as on the New; and contains a prominent revelation of “the great mystery of godliness, God is manifest in the flesh.”—“JEHOVAH is my Shepherd,” says David; and again, “Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel.”*—“He shall feed his flock like a Shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young.”†—“And he shall stand and feed in the strength of JEHOVAH, in the majesty of the name of JEHOVAH his God.”‡ Who is here spoken of? Surely, he who was to be born at Bethlehem, “whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting.”—“Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, against the Man, who is my fellow, saith the LORD of hosts; smite the Shepherd.”§—When, I say, we consider these predictions in connection, with what the New Testament says, of “the good Shepherd, who layeth down his life, for the sheep:” “the great Shepherd of the sheep:” “the chief Shepherd:”|| we consider vast, yea, all spiritual blessings, involved in this name alone.

P. 38. l. 6. ‘He shall execute judgment and justice in the earth; but not in heaven.’ I do not see the intention of this addition to this text from Jeremiah. Our enquiry is not concerning the kingdom of the Messiah in heaven; (though he there reigns Lord of all worlds,) but the nature of that kingdom, which he hath set up, or will set up, on earth; whether the nature and administration of it be spiritual or ‘altogether earthly.’—Perhaps it is meant, that he shall reign visibly on earth; and not as ascended into heaven, and ruling by his providence and the influences of his grace. This, however, suggests the propriety of stating most explicitly our views of a spiritual kingdom, as distinguished from one ‘altogether earthly.’

* Ps. xxiii. 1, 2. lxxx. 1. † Is. xl. 11. ‡ Mic. v. 2—4.

§ Zech. xiii. 7. || John x. 11—14. 26—30. Heb. xiii. 20. 1 Pet. v. 4.

We consider that as an earthly kingdom, (whether we see the king or not,) which is administered, in great measure, like the other kingdoms of this world; and which provides, or professes to provide, only for the temporal security and prosperity of its subjects. It may indeed be connected with the support or establishment of religion, in one form or other; but it does not profess directly to confer spiritual blessings on those, over whom it is established. On the other hand, we consider that as a spiritual kingdom, which is conducted on different principles, from the kingdoms of this world, and for other purposes; which does not profess to confer temporal wealth, honour, and prosperity on any of its subjects; nor always to secure them from great and heavy temporal trials, and oppressions; but immediately to confer spiritual blessings, on all who truly belong to it, even “righteousness, and peace, and joy in “the Holy Ghost.”* “Spiritual blessings,” are those benefits which, (besides their tendency to our temporal comfort) secure the eternal happiness of our immortal souls, and also that of our bodies as raised incorruptible and glorious: but merely earthly blessings, at most, only conduce to our comfort and well-being, for our short and uncertain continuance in this present world. To say, therefore, that the Messiah’s kingdom is spiritual, implies, that it secures, (as distinct from temporal good,) eternal happiness, to all the true subjects of it: but to say, that it is ‘altogether earthly,’ in our view of it, denotes, that it only secures earthly advantages to its subjects, however loyal and faithful; and that, as to eternal happiness or misery, it leaves them precisely as they were. If Mr. C. or the Jews in general, understand the terms in any other sense, when that sense is clearly stated, it may require consideration.

* Rom. xiv. 17. Eph. i. 3.

Our view of the Messiah’s kingdom, as spiritual, does not exclude many temporal advantages ensured to its genuine subjects: for whatever prepares the soul for holy happiness in another world, adds to our true comfort in this life; and to them, who “seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness,” “all other things shall be added.” “The LORD will give grace and glory; and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.”* But we exclude from the catalogue of these blessings, whatever tends to gratify, and give energy to, man’s corrupt passions; such as rapacity for wealth, ambition of pre-eminence, lust of dominion, thirst after revenge, desire of the pleasures, pomp, and pride of life; and indeed the craving after any animal indulgence, beyond the rule of duty, expediency, and love to all men.—And we give an immense pre-eminence to those blessings, which will be enjoyed for ever, above the most rational and legitimate comforts of this present state.—To be made partakers of heavenly wisdom and knowledge; to have “the heart circumcised,” by the regeneration of the Holy Spirit; to be pardoned, and justified by faith, with believing Abraham; to be renewed unto holiness; to have God for our Father, Friend, and Portion; our “Guide unto death, and,” at that crisis, “to receive us to glory;” to walk with him, in assured faith and hope; to worship him in “the Spirit of adoption;” to enjoy the earnest and fore-tastes of eternal happiness; to be delivered from the fear of death, and at length from death itself, when "mortality shall be swallowed up in life:" These are some of the spiritual blessings of our Messiah's kingdom.

* Ps. lxxxiv. 11. Matt. vi. 33.

On the other hand, 'a kingdom altogether earthly,' would supply or ensure none of these things; neither heavenly wisdom and knowledge, nor renewal unto holiness, nor "justification unto life," nor "reconciliation unto God," nor adoption into his family; nor the meetness for a holy heaven, nor admission into it; nor "the resurrection of the just." If these things belong exclusively to a spiritual kingdom; it would be waste of time, to bring a formal proof, that the Messiah's kingdom, at least includes spiritual blessings to its true subjects. But if such blessings be included in Mr. C.'s notion of an altogether earthly kingdom; he only uses words in a different sense, than we do, or men in general do, and "a strife of words" is not edifying.

I suspect, however, that the question, whether these things are included among the blessings of the Messiah's kingdom, or not, was out of sight, when he wrote the passage: for, while temporal advantages appear far most prominent in his mind, in every part of his book, he occasionally gives intimations of some things, that are certainly spiritual blessings, which will be conferred by the Messiah.

According to the expectations of the Jews in the time of Jesus, and even the expectations of his apostles before his resurrection; it is evident, that a Messiah, coming, like the conquerors of this world, but far superior in power to all of them; to free the nation of Israel from subjection to the Romans, and from all foreign vassalage; to lead them forth to victory and triumph; to subjugate other nations, and to advance Israel to pre-eminence, prosperity, and dominion; constituted the object of their desires and hopes. It is also evident, that this, in most instances, was connected with the thirst after a contemptuous and insulting revenge upon their oppressors, and of exercising a haughty and severe domination over mankind at large: and, as far as I can judge from the specimen before me, it appears, that the expectation and desire, of modern Jews, are nearly the same. If this be not the case, let them explicitly declare, what they do expect and desire, at the supposed coming of their Messiah.

It is now becoming more and more the opinion of studious Christians, that when Israel shall be converted to their long rejected Messiah, they will be gathered from their dispersions, and reinstated in their own land; which being rendered as fertile, as in times past, (perhaps much more so,) and extended to the utmost limits of the grants made to the patriarchs; will yield them in rich abundance all things needful and comfortable for this present life. It is also thought, that they will live in this land, under rulers of their own nation, as the vicegerents of the Messiah, of David, or "the Son of David," in entire peace and security, free from invader or oppressor, and from the fear of any: and that, along with all spiritual blessings in rich abundance, they will be voluntarily regarded, by all other nations, then truly converted to Christianity, with peculiar love, and gratitude, and honour, as the source of all their spiritual blessings; and especially, as most nearly related to their common Messiah and Saviour, who is "the Light of the Gentiles, and the GLORY of his people Israel."

It is indeed supposed, according to several prophecies, that great opposition will be made by many powerful enemies, to this their restoration; and that immense destruction of opposing Gentiles will precede and attend it, while other Gentiles will concur in promoting it. But, this being accomplished, a general conversion of the nations will follow, till those prophecies, which assure us, "that the earth shall “be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the LORD, “as the waters cover the sea,” shall be literally accomplished; that then, “they will beat their swords into “plough-shares—and learn war no more;” and that this state will continue at least a thousand years, and nearly to the end of the world. During this whole period, an honorary and affectionate pre-eminence will be freely rendered to Israel, by all the numberless partakers of the blessings of their Messiah’s reign.

But it is not supposed, that Israel will either possess or desire authoritative dominion over the nations; or any thing to gratify the corrupt passions before spoken of; but every thing to promote “righteousness and peace, and joy “in the Holy Ghost.” The personal reign of Christ on earth, the existence, or non-existence, of the ceremonial law of Moses; and several other things, are differently held by different persons: and it is not needful for the author to be very explicit here, concerning his own sentiments on these points.—But the above is the outline of his views, after the constant study of the scriptures, day by day, during thirty-eight years at least.

Every promise of the Messiah, from that made to our fallen first parents, which contains, as it were in embryo, all the blessings of redemption and deliverance from sin and all its consequences; from Satan and his dominion, with victory and triumph over all enemies; and those to Abraham, and throughout the scripture; to the last prediction of the Old Testament, “Unto you that fear my “name, shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing “in his beams;”* combine in shewing, that spiritual blessings, primarily and especially, constitute the felicity of Messiah’s reign: and I shall not weary the reader by enlarging in so plain a case.

* Gen. iii. 15. Mal. iv. 2.

In fact, I should feel an increasing disregard to the result of the controversy, if I could doubt that the blessings of Messiah's kingdom were spiritual and eternal. Were I a Jew, or proselyte; and were 'an altogether earthly kingdom,' in all possible glory and majesty established, under an earthly Messiah; and did I occupy the highest station in this kingdom: what, at my time of life, and with the full conviction, that "shortly I must put off this my tabernacle;" I say, what good could such a station secure to me?—But if I am partaker of those spiritual and eternal blessings, which "are the gift of God through Jesus Christ," I have "all my salvation and all my desire;" and may say with Simeon, "Now, Lord, dismissest thou thy servant in peace; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation:" or, with dying Jacob, "I have waited for thy salvation, O LORD."* And here, I cannot but lament that Mr. C., throughout his book, does not appear to be possessed with any deeply realizing and influencing views of an eternal world of happiness or misery. It is not easy to discover, with exactness, what his sentiments are on these topics. There are indeed, occasionally, some intimations on this immensely momentous subject; yet in general he writes, very much as if this world were our all. Probably, he has the same sentiments of the superior advantages of Jews above Gentiles, as to eternal salvation, which his ancestors had in the days of Christ: but they are not prominently stated, or particularly insisted on, as the grand concern; and not at all, in any connection with the coming and kingdom of the Messiah. If I understand him, salvation is to be to the Jews by the law of Moses; and in no respect by the Messiah.

Now, as I most firmly believe, that after this vain, transient, and uncertain life, a state of endless happiness or misery will follow; and that, as all are sinners, no man can be saved from final misery, and obtain eternal happiness, but by the mercy and grace of God, in the way of his appointment, which, I am assured is, by faith in the Messiah, promised from the fall of Adam: and as all else seems nothing to me, in comparison of this, I stand amazed, that a man can think it worth while, to dispute about an ‘altogether earthly kingdom;’ which by his own account, will not commence, till he is either very far advanced in years, or has entered into the eternal world; and so can have no farther concern with any of those things which “are done under the sun!” or in the words, which he marks in Italicks, under the whole heaven.

* Gen. xlix. 18.

All the past generations of Israel, according to this, have left the earth, without the least advantage from this ‘altogether earthly kingdom of the Messiah:’ at any rate most of the present race will leave the earth, before the earliest period now specified for his coming shall arrive: and, alas! if there were any well grounded hope of its arrival, still only a few of the whole race could partake of the more splendid advantages expected; and that only for a short space. Still “vanity and vexation” would be the inventory of earthly good; still man must “eat his bread in labour and sorrow, till he return to the ground whence he is taken.” Are we then to consider this writer’s views as a specimen of Judaism? At any rate it excites my deepest commiseration.

I shall close this part, by asking, whether the texts adduced, concerning the Messiah’s kingdom, on the thirty-seventh page, contain no predictions or promises of spiritual blessings?

P. 38. l. 6. In adducing the prophecy of Daniel, “The kingdom and dominion—shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High.” Mr. C. quotes it, “to the “holy nation of the most High.”* I am not fully competent to say, how far the Chaldee will bear this translation: but I thought it right to note the variation. Our version seems to be literal.

P. 38. l. 19. ‘PROOF FROM THE GOSPEL, &c.’ From these quotations, it is probable, that the place, where the Messiah reigns, or shall reign, is principally intended by Mr. C. when he affirms, the Messiah’s kingdom to be ‘altogether earthly:’ as he has added after the quotation from Jeremiah.—“He shall execute judgment and justice in the “earth,”† but not in heaven.

L. 26. ‘A throne, &c.’ “Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre, &c.” Will any ‘throne on earth’ be “for ever and ever?”‡ It appears evidently, that the dominion mentioned by Daniel, as given to the Son of man, is established in heaven, and not on earth.§ This, however, is a subject, on which I shall not at present enter: many, who hold with me, the general views of the Messiah’s kingdom, expect a personal and visible reign of Christ on earth, during the millennium. (l. 30.) “Eating and drinking,” are terms often used figuratively, as in the place referred to: but in the Messiah’s kingdom, as far as this world is concerned, men literally eat and drink, as well as in other kingdoms, though in a more holy manner. It is surprising, that a proof, from the New Testament, of Christ’s judging Israel only, should be brought; and that judging Israel should be considered as synonymous to “reigning over Israel;” when the judgment spoken of most evidently must be judging, in order to the condemnation of the nation in general. The same is the import of the promise to the apostles, that they shall “judge the

* Dan. vii. 27.

† Jer. xxiii. 5, 6.

‡ Ps. xlv. 6.

§ Dan. vii. 9—14.

“twelve tribes of Israel.”* When Mr. C. asserts, (last line but two,) that the Messiah will be king ‘over Israel only,’ he fixes a meaning on the words, which is totally inconsistent with the whole of the New Testament: indeed it does not clearly appear in what sense he himself understands them: for I suppose he will allow that the Messiah shall rule the nations, though it be only to punish and destroy them.

P. 38, last line but one. ‘LAW OF AN AMBASSADOR.’
 P. 39. 1. 2. ‘This ambassador, &c.’ If the ambassador be commissioned and instructed to go to the government of the country, to which he is sent, he certainly ought to do it: but it is not the uniform practice of kings to send ambassadors to the governors of a country; especially when those governors are usurpers, rebels, and traitors to their prince; and tyrants over his loyal subjects. In these cases, they sometimes send ambassadors to inferior persons, who loyally adhere to their lawful king. Indeed it is by no means uncommon for princes to send ambassadors to those, who, in any country, resist the authority of the ruling powers, according as political purposes may be answered by it.—But were it otherwise, surely the infinite God is not bound by the rules and customs of puny mortals.—“My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the LORD: for as the heavens are higher than the earth; so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.”† Even Moses was sent to the enslaved Israelites to deliver them, and not as an ambassador to treat with Pharaoh about their deliverance. The prophets in general were sent to the people, as well as to the princes: and when sent to the princes, it was never to treat with them, as the ambassadors of one king,

* 1 Sam. ii. 25. Ez. xi. 4. xxii. 2. xxiii. 24, 36, 45. xxiv. 14.
 Ob. 21. 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3. † Is. lv. 8, 9.

with another king, thus placing the Sovereign of the world on a level with his creatures: but as reprovers of their crimes in the name of JEHOVAH, or as encouraging their confidence in him. What does Mr. C. think of Jeremiah's conduct, who even counselled the people to desert Zedekiah and the princes, and to submit to the Chaldeans?* Did he observe 'the law of an ambassador?' It is awfully presumptuous, in this manner to dictate and prescribe to God, what his conduct ought to be.—“Who hath directed the Spirit of the LORD, or being his counsellor hath taught him? With whom took he counsel, and who instructed him, and taught him the path of judgment, and taught him knowledge, and shewed him the way of understanding?”†—It is 'the law of an ambassador,' at all times and in all cases, to obey the commands, and adhere to the instructions, of him who sent him; and not to deviate a hair's breadth, to oblige or conciliate those to whom he is sent. If either inclination, or fear, or hope, induce him to act contrary, in any respect, to the instructions given him, he betrays his trust, and is liable to be disowned and punished by his principal.—Thus Jesus says, “I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me:”‡ and he continually declares himself to this effect. His apostles also declare, that—“if they were men-pleasers, they could not be the servants of Jesus Christ.” If an ambassador be sent to one people, to make proposals; and, in case they will not accede to them, if he be ordered to go to another people, (which is not uncommon,) he fulfils the 'law of an ambassador,' by acting according to these instructions.

P. 39. l. 24. 'Burst out a laughing, &c.' The reader will judge how far this language suits the nature and importance of the subject. It however approaches more nearly to the actual conduct of the Jews, in our Lord's days, than perhaps even Mr. C. was aware.*

* Jer. xxvii. 12—17. xxxviii. 1—3. † Is. xl. 13, 14. ‡ John vi. 38.

L. 30. 'Punished with a just punishment.'—Thus the Jews, "crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, &c.:" therefore the old imprecation of their ancestors remains in force, "His blood be on us and on our children."† Oh, may "the Spirit of grace and supplication be speedily "poured out upon them," that they may look on him "whom they have pierced," with godly sorrow and penitent faith; and have the curse exchanged for a blessing, and for all blessings! Let all Christians pray for this without ceasing.

L. 31. 'This was the case with the Gentile Messiah. He was sent, &c.'—Our Lord's personal ministry was principally among the Jews: but the commission which he gave to his apostles shews, that he considered himself, as Saviour and King of all nations.‡ Let it, however, be observed, that he said, "I am sent to the lost sheep of the house of "Israel:" but he never said, 'I am sent to the nation of 'Israel;'[§] much less was he sent to its corrupt and wicked shepherds. His profession therefore was consistent with his conduct, and it was his duty to adhere to his commission, or "the will of his Father who sent him."

L. 35. 'KING Herod, &c.'—King Herod died when Jesus was an infant:§ but had he been living, would it have been proper that Jesus, when about to enter on his ministry, should go to that cruel tyrant, who had before attempted to murder him?—Herod, the tetrarch of Galilee, (who probably is meant,) had no authority in Judea, or connection with the Sanhedrin. Pontius Pilate was governor of Judea. Ought Jesus then to have gone to

* Luke vi. 25. xvi. 14. Jam. iv. 9. † Matt. xxvii. 25.
 Heb. vi. 6. ‡ Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Mark xvi. 15, 16. Luke xxiv. 47, 48
 Acts i. 8. § Matt. ii. 19, 20.

this idolatrous governor, as well as to Annas and Caiaphas and the Sanhedrin?

P. 40. 1. 1, 2. ‘He never went to Jerusalem, &c.’—It would be well, if men, before they publish their remarks on any book, or attempt to refute it, would carefully read the whole of it. Our Lord went to Jerusalem soon after he entered on his publick work; and when he had hitherto, as far as we can learn, wrought only one miracle.* Nothing could be more publick, than his conduct on this occasion, in driving the buyers and sellers from the courts of the temple; nothing more suited to make his claim known to the rulers and priests; nothing more efficacious could be even imagined, to excite them to investigate that claim. Accordingly he was interrogated concerning it; and the Jews “said unto him, What sign shewest thou unto us, that thou doest these things?”† To this demand, he gave an answer, exactly coinciding with what he spake on another occasion; making his resurrection from the dead, after they had slain him, THE SIGN, above all others, of his authority to do these things. The language, in which this answer was given, implying a decisive intimation of his divine dignity and power, being misunderstood, and misreported, yet remembered long afterwards, formed one of his accusations before Caiaphas, and the Sanhedrin.‡ Thus the prophecy of Malachi was fulfilled, “The LORD, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple; even the Messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the LORD of hosts: But who may abide the day of his coming?”§

At this time, he wrought such miracles, that Nicodemus, one of the Sanhedrin, acknowledged in his own name, and in the name of other rulers and Pharisees, “We know, that

* John ii. 11—13.
Matt. xxvi. 61, 62.

† John ii. 14—18.

‡ John ii. 19—22.

§ Mal. iii. 1, 2.

“thou art a Teacher come from God; for no man can do the miracles which thou doest, except God be with him.”* Indeed the miracles wrought by him at Jerusalem procured him a favourable reception even in Galilee.†

This preceded the imprisonment of John Baptist. It was also in an early part of our Lord’s ministry, that he healed the man at the pool of Bethesda, and ordered him to carry his bed on the Sabbath. On account of this he was persecuted evidently before the Sanhedrin; and made that defence, which contains as high claims of Deity and universal dominion, as can be conceived; and at the same time stated before his judges, the evidences by which those claims were supported, in the most explicit, and, as the event shewed, most unanswerable manner.‡

‘He never went to Jerusalem.’ Such an assertion should render the reader cautious how he credits other unproved assertions of the writer.

L. 2. ‘And why? Because he had heard, &c.’ L. 9, 10. ‘He was afraid to go to Jerusalem, &c.’

Our Lord certainly went to Jerusalem, both before and after John’s imprisonment; and taught boldly at the temple without fear of any man, or body of men. But why should John Baptist’s imprisonment by Herod make Jesus afraid of going to Jerusalem? What authority had Herod in Jerusalem? He was tetrarch of Galilee,§ while Pontius Pilate was governor of Judea. Had a motive of this kind acquired any influence on our Lord, he would have declined going into Galilee, lest Herod should imprison and kill him also: and indeed his insidious enemies did afterwards urge this reason, why he should leave Galilee.||

Jesus had preached and wrought miracles, in Judea, in Galilee, and at Jerusalem, for a considerable time

* John iii. 1, 2.

† John iv. 45.

‡ John v. 16—47.

§ Luke iii. 1. 19, 20. xxiii. 6, 7.

|| Luke xiii. 31—35.

before John was imprisoned: and his usual abode seems to have been at Nazareth.—“But when he had heard “that John was cast into prison, he departed” (probably from Judea) “into Galilee; and, leaving Nazareth, he came “and dwelt at Capernaum.”* So far from fearing the power, which had shut up John in prison, that he went to reside in the heart of Herod’s dominions; and his more stated labours were from that time in Galilee.

P. 40, 41.—The quotations on these pages are made with the omission of many verses, on which the meaning greatly depends; but nothing requires special notice.

P. 41. l. 5. ‘What sign, &c.’ L. 21. ‘Not once gave them ‘a sign, &c.’ Our Lord paid no more court to the many than to the powerful; and would no more work a needless ostentatious miracle, to satisfy the presumptuous multitude, who were disposed to “take him by force and make him “King;” than at the demand of those enemies, who determined to “take him by force, and put him to death.”

P. 41. l. 27, 28. ‘Was his commission, &c.?’—“Jesus came “into the world to save sinners.” “I came not to call the “righteous, but sinners to repentance.” He came to be “the Saviour of the world:” the Prophet, Priest, and King of his church; the Ruler over the whole universe, and the Judge of the living and the dead. But his personal ministry consisted principally in teaching, and in confirming his doctrine by miracles of mercy and love. “He “went about doing good.”

L. 31, 32. ‘If this is true, &c.’—Let the reader make his own remarks on the language of this sentence. It could hardly have been expected from a Rabbi, or from a teacher of Hebrew in the University of Cambridge. The end of our Lord’s coming, both as stated by Gabriel and Zacharias, takes in the whole effect of his mission, from his birth to the end of the world; and not merely his personal ministry.

* Matt. iv. 12—18. Mark i. 14. John iii. 22—24. iv. 3.

P. 42. l. 8. ‘His people, &c.’—Not to adduce the New Testament use of this expression, before the conclusion drawn from it be established, some passages in the prophets should be noticed.—“Whom the LORD of hosts shall bless, saying, blessed be Egypt, my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance.”* “In the place, where it was said to them, Ye are not my people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God.”—“And I will say to them, which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God.”† “And many nations shall be joined unto the LORD in that day, and shall be my people.”‡ “His people,” therefore, includes, all who truly believe and obey him, whether Jews or Gentiles, and none else. “He became the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him.”§

L. 10. ‘NOT A PREACHER.’ The predictions, that the Messiah should be a King, by no means prove, that he would not be a Preacher. Moses was “king in Jeshurun:”|| Yet he says, “Behold I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the LORD my God hath commanded me.”¶—“The Spirit of the LORD is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted; to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.” Is this a prophecy of the Messiah, or not? If not, Whom does the prophet personate? Again, either David, or the Messiah says, “I have preached righteousness in the great congregation. Lo, I have not refrained my lips, and that thou knowest

* Is. xix. 25. † Hos. i. 10. ii. 23. ‡ Zech. ii. 11. § Heb. v. 9.

|| Deut. xxxiii. 5. ¶ Deut. iv. 5.  Is. lxi. 1—3. Luke iv. 17—21.

“I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart; I have “declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation: I have not “concealed thy loving kindness and truth from the great “congregation.”* And again, “My mouth shall shew “forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day.”
 “Hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works. Now, also,
 “that I am old and grey-headed, O God, forsake me not;
 “until I have shewed thy strength to this generation, and “thy power to every one that is yet to come.”† Even Solomon appears perhaps more glorious as a preacher, than as a king.—“The words of the PREACHER, the son of “David, the king of Jerusalem:” “I the PREACHER was “king over Israel in Jerusalem.”‡ In this especially Solomon was a type of Christ: but “behold, a greater “than Solomon is here.”

P. 43. l. 2. ‘To fight, &c.’—No doubt, the Messiah will fight against the enemies of Israel: but probably Zechariah, or the Holy Spirit as speaking by him, intended enemies of another kind, from whom the Saviour delivers all true believers as his people. And let it be observed, that the Sinai-covenant is not referred to; but that which was confirmed to Abraham by an oath.

P. 43. l. 21. ‘CONCLUSION OF THE EMBASSY.’

P. 44. l. 3. ‘Well might, &c.’—That worldly and ungodly men should oppose and revile the holy Jesus, cannot be wonderful: but that any one should consider their revilings as a proof, that he was a bad man, without any other evidence adduced, is most unreasonable and most marvellous.
 He was indeed taken, and judged, and put to death; but his embassy did not conclude with his death. For he arose, and ascended, and reigns over all worlds, while the desolations of Jerusalem and the temple, the dreadful judgments which overtook his crucifiers; and the subsequent

* Ps. xl. 9, 10. † Ps. lxxi. 15, 17, 18. ‡ Ec. i. 1, 12. xii. 8—10.

establishment of Christianity in the world, with all the past, present, and future happy consequences, resulting from it, are sequels of his embassy; which will be concluded, when he shall come to judge the world, to “put all “enemies under his feet,” and cause his friends to sit down with him upon his throne: but not till that final catastrophe.

P. 44. l. 9. ‘THE MESSIAH WAS TO BE A CONQUEROR.’

‘He will subduc, &c.’—The Messiah will eventually subdue all nations; but not immediately at his coming. “The “Stone cut out of the mountain without hands,” does not at once, “become a great Mountain and fill the whole “earth.”—“Of the increase of his government and peace, “there shall be no end.”* It is no where said, that this should occur at his coming. With what weapons, and in what manner, the Messiah fights and conquers, may give occasion to discordancy of sentiment: but we all agree, that he fights and conquers, and will conquer, and “must “reign till all enemies are put under his feet.”† Vast multitudes have been and will be conquered by those “wea- “pons, which are not carnal but mighty through God,” and become his willing subjects.‡ Others he has fought against, and will fight against, by his hostile armies; as he did against Jerusalem by “his armies” the Romans;§ and as he will against all antichristian opposers of his cause, at the introduction of the millennium.|| Among others, he will fight against the adversaries of converted Israel, when the time of their restoration shall come. “And the breath “of his lips shall slay the wicked” at the day of judgment.

The prophecies here produced, (P. 44, 45.) prove nothing in this argument; because, when compared with the context of each, they evidently appear to refer to different parts of the same general subject.

* Dan. ii. 34, 35. 44, 45. Is. ix. 5, 6. † Ps. cx. 1. 1 Cor. xv. 25.

‡ Ps. cx. 2, 3. 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. § Zech. xiv. 1, 2. Matt. xxii. 7.

|| Ez. xxxviii. Rev. xix. 11—21.

The first promise of a Messiah, "Her Seed," (that of the woman,) "shall bruise thy head," (that of the serpent, the devil,) leads us to consider other victories of the Messiah, and over very different enemies, than those mentioned by Mr. C. as of by far the greatest importance in this holy warfare. Satan, sin, the world, and death are especially those enemies, which Zacharias meant, when he said; "that being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, we might serve him without fear, in righteousness and holiness before him all the days of our life."* Thus it is said in Micah. "He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us: he will subdue our iniquities:" and by Ezekiel, "I will also save you from all your uncleannesses."† These are enemies and victories, which Mr. C. seems not to have a thought of.

It is indeed frequently predicted, that the Messiah will terribly destroy his enemies, and graciously protect his people: but it is by no means so prominent in prophecy, that he will exalt his people to dominion over the rest of the world. In the millennium, "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High."‡ In and with their King, they shall have the pre-eminence. But where is the prediction, that Israel as a nation shall have dominion over other nations? Little is spoken upon this part of the subject. Even the result of their restoration, is generally represented, as their dwelling in peace and security, and none making them afraid.§

P. 46. l. 10. 'A particular observation, &c.'

L. 11. 'Every man knows that whatever has a beginning has also an end.'—According to this, there are no created immortal spirits, either angels or men. If Mr. C. did not mean, (as I should not suppose he did,) to deny the immortality of the human soul, and of holy angels, here is an exception to his universal rule. Plato seems to have held a similar opinion; for he grounds many of his arguments for the soul's continuing to live after the death of the body, on the supposition that it had a previous existence, to which he assigns no beginning. (Phædo.)

* Luke i. 71—75. † Ez. xxxvi. 29. Mic. vii. 19. ‡ Dan. vii. 14. 27. § Jer. xxiii. 5—7. xxxii. 37. xxxiii. 16. Ez. xxxiv. 25—28. Am. ix. 14, 15.

L. 26. ‘A drawing, &c.’—That “known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world,” yea, from eternity; that he formed, so to speak, a plan of his grand designs in his own infinite mind; that he revealed, in the way of prophecy some particulars of this plan; and that he invariably and without any change of purpose, is accomplishing this great object, through successive generations; I firmly believe. But when the drawing of this plan is said to be contained in ‘the law of Moses,’ (P. 47. l. 4.) further proof is needful. The tabernacle, and all connected with it, was made “after the pattern, which was shewed Moses in the Mount:”* for they were intended, as “a shadow of good things to come.” And in like manner David had “the pattern of all—by the Spirit,” respecting Solomon’s temple. “The LORD made me to understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of the pattern.”† Moses also seems to have had something of a drawing, or delineation, shewn him of the promised land:‡ but where do we meet with any intimation, that God gave him a drawing, of all the particulars here mentioned? or indeed how was it possible? Can mortal man receive and comprehend all the plans and designs of the infinite God? Some intimations are given concerning a few of the particulars in this catalogue; but very little: and in most cases, that little is intimated with considerable and intended obscurity. ‘In this drawing is also to be found, how long

* Ex. xxv. 40.

† 1 Chr. xxviii. 11. 19.

‡ Num. xxxiv.

‘this world shall exist,’ (P. 47. l. 2.) I ask, Where? Conjectures have been made, some sufficiently presumptuous; and conclusions from inadequate premises: but I believe, that neither man, nor angel, knows the exact time, when the world shall come to an end.* As Mr. C. means to build a great deal indeed on this drawing; something more than assertion is requisite, in laying and strengthening his foundation. The subdrawings, (P. 47. l. 5.) of the prophets, contain some further intimations; but very far from what is ascribed to them; they only contain detached extracts, so to speak, out of the volume of God’s secret decrees.

P. 47. l. 11. ‘Abridgment of the law and of the prophets?’

L. 18. ‘Six is a complete number.’—Some think, seven is a complete number; and it must be allowed, that the number seven is so often, and so emphatically, specified in scripture, as to imply something peculiar in it: I suppose from the six days of creation, and the seventh of rest. Yet nothing, in a way of argument, can thence be deduced.

L. 28—32. ‘His name was called Adam, &c.’—The name Adam, as every smatterer in Hebrew knows, is the name of the human species, as well as of the first man; and seems to have been taken merely from אָדָם, the material from which his body was formed.† The scripture indeed assigns special significations to several names, and the reasons for which they were given; as Eve, Abraham, Ishmael, Sarah, Isaac, Jacob, Israel, &c:‡ but not a hint is given, that there was any mystery in the name ADAM: all advanced therefore on this ground is mere assertion or imagination.

Last line. ‘So long, or near it, &c.’—The words ‘or near it,’ are very conveniently introduced: for Mr. C.’s computation, must be made to fit his hypothesis. This resembles the bed of Procrustes, 'who, having seized on travellers, measured them by his bed; and if too long he cut them shorter, but if too short he stretched them longer.'

* Matt. xxiv. 36. † Gen. ii. 7. v. 2. ‡ Gen. iii. 20. xvi. 11. xvii. 5. 15. 19. xxi. 3—6. xxv. 26. xxvii. 36. xxxii. 28. Ex. ii. 10.

P. 47. last line but one. P. 48. l. 1—11. 'In the year of the creation, &c.' According to the most approved chronologists, the computation being made from the Hebrew bible, David was born A. M. 2919; and the present is computed to be about A. M. 5818.—Exactness is not the object. The Septuagint makes it much more, but I believe few well-informed persons make it much less. Yet this entirely subverts the whole of Mr. C.'s hypothesis: for 2919 years to David's birth, require 2919 subsequent to it, before the coming of the Messiah; which would lead us to A. M. 5838, instead of A. M. 5708, and so prolong the term of his expected coming 130 years longer, than Mr. C. calculates.—But perhaps our chronology may answer his purpose as well, when fairly considered; for, according to our computation, the present year is A. M. 5819: and this leaves only 19 years to A. M. 5838, when the date of David's birth will be doubled. This would be more convenient for his scheme than 137 years yet to come; it would also save him the trouble of shortening the term; and besides be more consistent with his calculations in another place. (p. 66.)

P. 48. l. 17. 'The end of any thing may be shortened.'—It seems it may also be lengthened: for, from the time of Jesus, false Messiahs have appeared, almost in every century; and have for a while been welcomed by many of the Jews, and then disappeared. Thus every disappointment has reduced them to the necessity of lengthening the termination of the intervening period, one hundred years after another, to the present day: and when the present dream has proved a delusion, (as it most assuredly will), some other will be dreamed, to find a pretence for still lengthening the period: till “the Spirit of grace and supplications” be poured out, and they shall look with penitent faith on him whom they have so long “pierced,” and “crucified to themselves afresh,” from age to age.*

But there is no grappling with a phantom, or grasping smoke: like the shade of Anchises, it eludes the hand of him who would seize on it, Par levibus ventis, volucrique simillima somno. A serious argumentative answer cannot be expected, and the subject is too momentous for any other. The passage may, however, remind the reader of the prophet’s words: “They hatch cockatrice eggs, and “weave the spider’s web:”—“their webs shall not become “garments.”†

L. 18. ‘We know that Christ was born 910 years after David.’—‘The Jews have a tradition, that in the last year ‘of Darius, (Hystaspes,) died the prophets Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi. And from the same tradition they tell ‘us, that the kingdom of the Persians ceased also the same ‘year. For they will have it, that this was the Darius ‘whom Alexander conquered, and that the whole continu- ‘ance of the Persian empire was only fifty-two years. This ‘shews how ill they were acquainted with the affairs of ‘the Persian empire. And their countryman Josephus, in ‘the account which he gives us of those times, seems to ‘have been very little better informed concerning them.’ (Prideaux.) They confound Darius Hystaspes, with Darius Codomannus; though Xerxes, Artaxerxes, Longimanus, Darius Nothus, and Artaxerxes Mnemon, reigned between them. The Persian empire, from the accession of Darius the Mede, to the death of Darius Codomannus, continued for about 207 years. This occasions the great difference in chronology between Jewish and Christian writers, as to the times between the captivity, and the coming of our Lord: but Mr. C. varies even from this, and is repeatedly inconsistent with himself. It is generally computed that David died 1015 years before Christ, and consequently was born 1085 before him; but this is of little consequence.

* Zech. xii. 10—14.

† Is. lix. 4—6.

P. 48. l. 32. ‘The placing of Adam in the garden of Eden.’ As far as this passage agrees with the narrative of Moses, it is entitled to firm credence: (P. 48, 49.) but it is ‘intermixed with a few traditions;’ (P. 49. l. 32.) I do not indeed believe these traditions, yet they are not of sufficient importance to require any remarks. But the familiar colloquial manner, in which the events recorded in the word of God, and inseparably connected with the present and eternal interests of the human species, are mentioned, cannot satisfy any serious mind, Christian, Jewish, or Gentile.

P. 48. last line but one. ‘No angel could, &c.’ This the scripture does not say.—‘And God taught Adam the names even all of them. Then he proposed them to the angels, and said, Declare unto me the names of these things, if ye be true. They answered: Praise is thine; we have not knowledge, except as much as thou hast taught us. Truly thou art knowing and wise: and God said, O Adam, Declare to them the names of these things. And when he had declared to them their names; he (God) said, Did not I say to you, that I know the secret of the heavens and the earth; and I know what ye do openly and what ye conceal? And when we said to the angels, Adore Adam; they even adored: but Eblis (the devil,) refused, and was lifted up in pride.’ ‘And Satan caused them to fall from paradise, and we said, Go down, the one an enemy to the other.’ (Koran, 2d Chap.) Probably Mohammed derived his information from Jewish tradition; and he has added absurdity to it: but the coincidence is remarkable.

P. 49. l. 28. ‘Overcame Satan.’ It is well that Satan, the grand enemy of all, is at all mentioned, as to be overcome by man: but is this victory to be obtained by the power of Adam, or any of his fallen and sinful posterity, or, by that of “the Seed of the woman, who shall bruise the serpent’s head?” “The second Adam is the Lord from heaven.”

P. 50. l. 3. ‘THE LAW OF NOAH.’ It may be proper here to make a few remarks on this supposed law of Noah: because many writers, Christians as well as Jews, have mentioned it, as of an existing rule of duty: but where it is to be found in scripture, they do not state. In fact, it belongs to tradition: and, like the traditions of men in general, it “makes void the law of God,” and at the same time disannuls the gospel. The law of God commands “us to love him with all the heart,” and “all men as ourselves.” And the gospel calls transgressors to repentance, conversion, faith in the mercy of God, through the promised Redeemer, and obedience to the divine law as the fruit of this faith. But what do these precepts of Noah require, in order to acceptance and future happiness? Provided idolatry, blasphemy, (a crime not easily defined with precision,) incest, (another ambiguous term, diversely explained,) murder, robbery, and theft, and eating the member of a living creature, be avoided: a man may be a fornicator, an adulterer, a liar, a perjurer, a drunkard and glutton; a malignant, envious, contentious neighbour; covetous; a tyrant in his family; and in short guilty of almost all kinds of ungodliness, unrighteousness, and licentiousness; besides sins of omission of every kind without exception: and all this without endangering his salvation! Future happiness, according to this law, is secure even to such a character, without repentance, conversion, faith in the Saviour, mercy, or any benefit from “the covenants of promise.” On the other hand, if a man have once committed idolatry, blasphemy, incest, murder, robbery, or theft; this law opens no door of faith or repentance; provides no refuge or redress; but leaves him under hopeless condemnation. It is not probable, that all, perhaps any, of those who have spoken of this law, or these precepts, as actually given to Noah and his posterity, meant the whole of this: but as the matter is stated, in this publication especially, these are the undeniable consequences of such a law given to men, by which the obedient may obtain eternal life; and none else.

The third precept to ‘appoint and constitute just and upright judges, that justice might be maintained and impartially administered to all,’ could be obligatory upon very few, as few are concerned in the appointment of magistrates: and if no other law, either from revelation, or from man’s reason and conscience, were in force, what could be the standard or rule of that justice, which was to be impartially administered?—We may therefore conclude, that these precepts of Noah never were inculcated by God, for the purposes here spoken of: though some things afterwards incorporated into the ceremonial law of Moses, were previously obligatory, with respect to the atoning sacrifices, and the blood especially, “which is the life,” and that by which the atonement was made.*

We Gentiles, however, have the less cause to complain of the Jews, in endeavouring exclusively to appropriate the blessings of the Messiah’s kingdom, which they consider as ‘altogether earthly;’ while they allow us almost an equality, in those things which “accompany salvation with eternal glory.” And we would desire, in return for this liberality, to communicate to them, if possible, the inestimable blessings of the true Messiah’s spiritual and eternal kingdom. “That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you; that ye may have fellowship with

* Gen. ix. 4. Lev. xvii. 10—14.

“us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and
“with his Son Jesus Christ.”*

P. 50. l. 16. ‘There is a tradition, &c.’ I foresaw that the seventy nations, before spoken of, (p. 33, 34,) would introduce a difficulty about the descendants of Abraham, by Ishmael, by Keturah, and by Esau: but tradition comes in very conveniently to obviate or remove it: and as the Jews have tradition almost wholly in their own power; it must always be at hand for their accommodation, whenever its help is wanted. As Mohammed, when pressed with any new difficulty, always had a new revelation, and added a new chapter to the Koran; often in part contradictory to those which had before been published: so, from the immense farrago of traditions in the Talmuds, some one may at any time be produced, by him who will bestow the pains to rummage for it, suited to the emergency, whatever it may be; but not always consistent with other authorities produced from the same inexhaustible store. Something further, however, still remains to be done about these ‘seventy nations,’ before the whole can stand free from insuperable objection. It will be needful to shew, how many of the seventy nations were destroyed, whether by deluges, or fire, or earthquake, to make room for all the descendants of Reu, Serug, Nahor, and Terah, except Abraham. The seventy nations are those mentioned in the tenth of Genesis. “By these were the nations divided in “the earth after the flood.”† But no descendants of Heber, except Peleg, and his brother Joktan, are mentioned in that chapter: therefore, the descendants of Peleg, except Abraham, are there omitted; and niches must be provided for them, if they be admitted among the seventy.

L. 21. ‘Proof that there were no more than seventy ‘nations.’ L. 25. The text from Deuteronomy has already been considered. (L. 29.) It is indeed commanded that seventy bulls should be sacrificed on the several days of the feast of tabernacles;* and different methods have been taken of accounting for the singular arrangement of the number, as decreasing each day. But tradition alone informs us, that they were sacrifices for the seventy nations: and then this same tradition about these sacrifices is adduced as a proof, that there were seventy nations and no more! The proof, however, of this tradition itself will presently be considered.

* 1 John i. 3.

† Gen. x. 32.

P. 51. l. 11. 'ABRAHAM AND HIS FAMILY.—Next, &c.' There is nothing in this passage requiring particular notice; unless it be the notion of a drawing (l. 12,) and sub-drawing; (l. 22;) for which, I suppose, even tradition does not readily furnish authority, as it is not mentioned. In this drawing, 'it is recorded, that a man by the name 'of Abraham was to appear in the world, &c.' Now it so happens, that the drawing was not made till long after Abraham's death!

P. 52. l. 6, 7. 'I say, they are mistaken.' This may be compared with what has already been adduced concerning Shiloh, "and the gathering of the people to him."

L. 10. 'Everlasting, &c.' It is impossible, that any thing on earth can be everlasting, because the earth itself is not to endure for ever: neither does the original denote this. As, however, the seed of Abraham has not been possessed of the promised land, during more than seventeen hundred years past; the stubborn fact is against this interpretation. And if it be said, that Israel shall be reinstated in Canaan, and possess it till the end of the world, (which I doubt not will be the case) this does not in the least disprove our exposition of Jacob's prophecy. The sceptre and the lawgiver departed from Judah, as a nation, when Jesus came, and have been withheld from them ever since; which proves that Jesus is Shiloh, the promised Messiah. The prophecy of Hosea, in the former part of it, has been turned into history; "The children of Israel have abode many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without a teraphim." And, I trust, that in answer to the prayers, and by the blessing of God on the exertions, of Christians, the latter part also shall soon become history: "Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the LORD their God and David their King; and shall fear the LORD and his goodness, in the latter days."* The sceptre and the land are not precisely the same thing: had God seen good, he might have continued the Jews in Canaan, and kept them in hard and oppressive bondage under the Romans, the Saracens, and the Turks, to this day, without sceptre and lawgiver; yet they might have lived in the promised land. It cannot be properly said, the sceptre is the land, and the land is the sceptre; (p. 53. l. 5.) for a nation may have a country as their own to inhabit, and may yet be the abject slaves of a foreign despot in that land. Israel, however, for seventeen hundred years has neither had the land nor the sceptre.

P. 53. l. 17. 'The true explanation of the prophecy, (l. 21.) 'As long as Israel shall obey the law.' Jacob did not speak one word about Israel obeying the law: how, indeed, should he? for the law was not yet given.—The possession of Canaan was conditional, and the sceptre also; but the coming of Shiloh was not.

L. 30. 'The kingdom shall be restored to Israel.' Then certainly the kingdom has departed from Israel; else how could it be restored? Therefore Shiloh is come.

P. 54. l. 10. 'The argument of the Gentiles, that the sceptre has departed from Judah.'

* Hos. iii. 4, 5.

L. 12. ‘Take notice, &c.’—This paragraph states the fact, according to our interpretation of the prophecy.—When Jesus, the Son of David, came, he took the kingdom over Israel, and over all nations; whether they “would have him to reign over them,” or not.* But Israel, as a nation, crucified their King, and still “crucify him to themselves afresh.” The sceptre then departed from Judah, as a people, that it might be swayed by Judah’s most illustrious Descendant. And when Israel shall welcome their long rejected King, they shall share the blessings of his kingdom pre-eminently; but never till that time.—“Thus saith the LORD GOD, I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one; and will plant it upon a high mountain and eminent. In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it; and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell. And all the trees of the field shall know, that I have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and made the dry tree to flourish. I the LORD have spoken and have done it.”†

The sceptre and the lawgiver were departing from Judah, as a nation, when Shiloh came, whose right they were. As his kingdom more and more attained establishment, the sceptre and lawgiver disappeared, more and more from Judah: and at length his spiritual rule being fully confirmed; the whole political as well as ecclesiastical state of the Jews was subverted, and continues so to this very day. “He shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David;

* Is. ix. 6, 7. Luke xix. 11—27.

† Ez. xvii. 22—24. See also

Ez. xxi. 26, 27. Dan. vii. 14. Am. ix. 11, 12.

“and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever;
“and of his kingdom there shall be no end.”*

P. 55. l. 17. ‘The four empires were shewn to Abraham.’

L. 24. ‘In the shape, &c.’—It was revealed to Abram, that his seed should be in bondage in a strange land, till four hundred years were expired; and then God would bring them forth: and, respecting this, God made a covenant with him; and ordered him to prepare the animals here mentioned as a sacrifice, that the covenant might be ratified, with the customary rites and observances. Further than this Moses testifies nothing. The four kingdoms in Daniel were represented by a lion, a bear, a leopard; and a fourth beast, far more dreadful than any of them.† In a subsequent vision, a ram was the emblem of the Medo-Persian kingdom, and a he-goat of the Grecian: yet this he-goat is described as very powerful and formidable.‡ But in the dream of the four empires here given, a young heifer, (not an ox or bull,) is the emblem of the first kingdom; a she-goat of the Persian; a ram of the Grecian; and a gentle, loving, harmless turtle-dove, of the tremendous Roman power!—‘In the shape of a bird he saw the family of ‘Israel.’ (L. 28.) I suppose it is meant, that a young pigeon was an emblem of the Messiah’s kingdom: but, according to the view of it given in this publication, it is scarcely more apposite, than that of a turtle-dove of the Roman victories and domination! Do men, who amuse themselves and others, with fancies of this kind, really believe them? However that may be, I cannot think they require any answer.

P. 56. l. 27. ‘Although, &c.’—I am not disposed to object to Israel’s primogeniture, or pre-eminence among the nations: but fathers in general have some affection, and make some provision, for other children, besides the first-

* Luke i. 31—33.

† Dan. vii. 4—7.

‡ Dan. viii. 1—8.

born; nay, they sometimes disinherit the first-born, for ill-behaviour, and give the inheritance to their other children. This passage, however, concerning the unalienable right of the first-born, not only to the inheritance, but to the subjection of the other children as his servants, always to remain so, (P. 56, 57;) come with rather an ill grace from a Jew. Not only was Ishmael older than Isaac; but Esau was Jacob's elder brother, by the same mother; and by God's express appointment "the elder was to be the servant of the younger." Judah was younger than Reuben, and Simeon, and Levi; yet Jacob made him 'lord over all his brethren.' David was Jesse's youngest son; yet God chose him to be king over Israel. Solomon was not David's eldest surviving son; "and of all my sons," says David, "God hath chosen Solomon to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the LORD over Israel."* The general rule, therefore, admits of so many, and such important exceptions, that every argument grounded on it must be wholly inconclusive.

P. 57. l. 14. 'QUESTION.'—L. 16. 'His birth made him Lord, &c.'—I suspect, that Mr. C.'s political sentiments, which suppose subjects not born for themselves, but to be servants to the king, and to obey the orders of their king, (L. 19—23;) will not be much approved in this land of liberty; in which most men reasonably think, that kings and rulers are born, or advanced to authority, not for themselves; but for the benefit of the people; and will have a terrible account to render to God at least, if they neglect the welfare of their subjects, in order to please, and gratify, and aggrandize themselves. In respect of the kingdom of our God, who is infinite in wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness, the statement, though improperly expressed, might be admitted; and so in respect of the

* 1 Chr. xxviii. 5.

Messiah's kingdom, which yet is established wholly for the benefit, not only of subjects, but of rebels who submit to him; the glory alone of his manifested wisdom, righteousness, truth and love being reserved to himself. But that God should appoint one nation so to rule over other nations, as that all others should be considered as born to obey the orders, just or unjust, wise or foolish, of this favoured people, gives such a view of the divine conduct, as is wholly unscriptural, irrational, and intolerable; and makes the heart recoil at the very thoughts of it.

L. 27. ‘His great seal, that is circumcision.’—As by God’s express command, Ishmael, and the men of Abraham’s household, and the sons of Keturah and Esau were circumcised; this great seal has been given to many others, besides Israel:* and if this be the only token of dominion over all nations; there will be a danger of great competition about it, among the several nations who use circumcision at this day; and profess to derive it from Abraham. Even Ishmael and Edom may contest it with Israel.

L. 32. ‘The noun, &c.’—Learned men in general, whether Jews, Christians, or heathens, have hitherto agreed, that ISRAEL signifies “a Prince of God.” “Thy name shall be no more called Jacob, but Israel; for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed.”† “By his strength he had power with God.” יִשְׂרָאֵל is composed of שָׂרָה, he obtained the dominion, and אֱלֹהִים God:—יִשְׂרָאֵל is therefore, “a prince of God,” ‘one who obtains principal power from God.’ (Leigh.) SARAI, from the same root, signifies, my princess, SARAH a princess.

If, however, Mr. C. contrary to the text itself, and the general opinion of learned men, chooses to assign to the name another derivation; it is not a matter of such importance, as to require a refutation. The derivation assigned seems to require ISHRAEL, not ISRAEL: as JESHURUN, not JESURUN.*

* Gen. xvii. 10—15. 23—27.

† Gen. xxxii. 28. Hos. xii. 3—5.

P. 58. l. 4. ‘To Israel was delivered, &c.’—St. Paul calls “circumcision the seal;” but it was “the seal of the righteousness of the faith, which Abraham had, being yet uncircumcised.”† Circumcision is never called a seal, much less the great seal, in the Old Testament; nor yet the crown. The scriptures of the Old Testament never speak of any special blessings, as connected with the outward circumcision; but sometimes the contrary.‡—When peculiar blessings are promised, they are connected with “the circumcision of the heart.”§ Indeed it is surprising, in examining this subject, to find how very seldom circumcision is mentioned in the Old Testament, except at its appointment; and when the Israelites were circumcised on entering Canaan.|| There can, however, be no doubt, that the apostle has summed up the instruction of the Old Testament on the subject, when he says, “That is not circumcision, which is outward in the flesh:—circumcision is that of the heart, in the Spirit, not in the letter, whose praise is not of men but of God.”¶—“A great seal,” and “a crown,” in which Edom, the type of the most inveterate enemies of Israel, participated equally with Israel, is not greatly to be gloried in. The noun circumcision occurs but once in our version of the Old Testament.

L. 9. ‘Israel was elected before the creation of this world to be the lord and king of it.’—It is rather unfavourable to this statement, that Israel, through so long a course of years, has had so little, even of the appearance of dominion among

* Deut. xxxii. 15. xxxiii. 5.

† Rom. iv. 11. ‡ Jer. ix. 25, 26.

§ Deut. xxx. 6. Jer. iv. 4.

|| Gen. xvii. Josh. v. 2–9.

¶ Rom. ii. 28, 29.

 Ex. iv. 26.

the nations. This the writer felt, and anticipated the answer of the Gentiles; and he tries in vain to repel it. Above 3500 years have passed since the calling of Abraham, and the institution of circumcision. More than 400 years passed before the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage:* 480 from that time to the building of Solomon's temple:† 434 more to the Babylonish captivity: 588 from the beginning of the captivity to the Christian æra, and above 1800 years since that commenced. Yet the reign of David, after he became king over all Israel, and that of Solomon, comprising together 73 years, is almost the only term, in which they had any considerable dominion over other nations; and this was in comparatively a contracted circle, not extending over the twentieth part of the continent of Asia, and not at all including any part of Africa or Europe. So that, if dominion over the world was the grand temporal advantage intended for Israel, they have hitherto been unaccountably kept out of the possession of it. All the great kingdoms and empires, noted in history, have been possessed by the Gentiles; and Israel was generally subjected to one or other of them. Now 3500 years are so large a part of the 7000 to which the author seems to limit the duration of the world; and another so large a part had elapsed before the calling of Abraham; that it seems impossible, this design of Israel's election can ever be answered.

The passage under consideration, may, however, remind us of the answer, which the Jews of old made to our Lord, and which has perplexed commentators.—He had said “to those Jews which believed in him, If ye continue “in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed: and ye “shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. “They answered him, We be Abraham's seed; and were

* Ex. xii. 41.

† 1 Kings vi. 1.

“never in bondage to any man, how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?”* The nation had been bond-slaves in Egypt, captives at Babylon, and vassals to the three preceding great empires; Judea was at the time a province of the Roman empire, and deeply oppressed by that haughty power: yet they had “never been in bondage to any man!” The whole may also illustrate the words: ‘And to this day, Israel is still Israel:’—not the same as in the days of their pious progenitors; but the same, as in the days of Christ and his apostles.—St. Paul has given us the true meaning of the promises, to this effect. “The promise that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham and his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.”† The Messiah to descend from him, would be Lord of all the world: and all true believers of every age and nation, being considered as one with him, “inherit the earth,” the world, “all things.”‡

L. 18, 19. ‘It is a vain thing for the Gentiles to grasp at the kingdom of this world.’—Whatever other Gentiles may have, Christians, as such, have no controversy with Jews on this subject: they have no idea of ‘grasping at the kingdom of this world:’—Though sons, yet their valued inheritance is in heaven, not on earth. It is nothing to them, whether Gentile conquerors and oppressors exercise dominion over Jews, and treat them as abject slaves; or Jews exercise similar dominion over Gentiles. The oppressed they compassionate, and condemn the oppressors: yet they at least equally pity them also. The fact is clearly as here stated: ‘the Gentiles are the lords of the world and Israel are their servants even until this day:’ (L. 26, 27.) the right or grant is another thing, as is the future superiority or dominion. These things however seldom occur to the

* John viii. 31—35.

† Rom. iv. 13.

‡ Dan. vii. 13, 14. 27.

1 Cor. iii. 21—23. Gal. iii. 28, 29. Rev. iii. 21. v. 10. xi. 15. xxi. 7.

thoughts of real Christians: and they severely condemn themselves, if conscious of any rising desire of rule and dominion of this kind, over any human being. They know it to be wholly inconsistent with their principles to rule with rigour over the meanest servant: all men are their brethren, if not in Christ, yet in Adam; and their neighbours to be "loved as themselves." Even nominal Christians in general think little on the subject; nay, the pagan nations do not think of grasping in this sense 'at the kingdom of this world.' The idea seems peculiar to the Jews, and almost exclusively their own. I cannot conceive, that it ever enters into the politicks either of the potentates on the continent, or the Grand Turk, or the Great Mogul, or the Emperor of China; much less is it any part of the object of the London Society. The event will prove, whether the vain expectations of the Jews, from age to age, of temporal dominion over all nations, will ever be realized or not. I say vain: for what advantage could this be to all preceding generations, who have here lived in a state of vassalage, and have, previously to the expected period, entered the eternal world? and what real advantage, will the gratification of rapacity, ambition, love of domination, and vindictive passions, prove even to those who live at the expected time? An honourable precedency we allow will be given to converted and restored Israel; even that of cordial love and gratitude, for their and our Redeemer's sake. We know that, taught and influenced by Christian principles, they will bear these honours meekly and lovingly: and if God shall see good to invest them with any other authority; we know, that they will exercise it in righteousness, truth and goodness; and that their fellow Christians will cordially submit themselves in the fear of God. We feel, therefore, no concern on the subject. But we are fully convinced, that so long as their present ambition of dominion prevails, they never can be the subjects of the true Messiah. Till this be humbled and mortified, they never can receive the blessings of his kingdom. "The loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of man shall be made low; and the LORD alone shall be exalted in that day."* As far as this is their expectation from their Messiah, they should enjoy it unmolested; did I not believe, yea, certainly know, that they want a Messiah for far other and more important purposes, and are dying in their sins, because they believe not that Jesus is He.†

The statement in the rest of the passage might in many things be shewn to be doubtful or erroneous: but there seems nothing peculiarly requiring notice; nothing that affects the main argument.

P. 59. I. 28. 'THE WILDERNESS.—One question, &c.'—The reason assigned for the law having been given in a wilderness contains no argument, and has not much plausibility. It is probable, however, that the apostles at first thought, that the Gentiles would share the blessings of Messiah's reign, by submitting to the law of Moses, and, as proselytes to Judaism, embracing also Christianity. But they were afterwards led to a different view of the subject. The ceremonial law of Moses never could combine with a religion, which was to fill the whole earth.

P. 60. I. 3. 'THE SABBATH.'

L. 14. 'Every person knows, &c.'—This pairing of the days, and pairing of the nations, is so entirely without foundation in scripture, and so remote from all deduction of reasoning, or analogy, that one can hardly refrain from asking, Can any man be serious in maintaining such notions? In the pairing of the nations, we ought to have known which were joined together: and it can hardly help occurring to the reader, that, on the supposition, of any thing of the kind having indeed taken place; it certainly was an introduction to stated and habitual quarrelling and fighting: for which pair have not repeatedly gone to war one with the other?

* Is. ii. 11. 17.

† John viii. 24.

L. 28. ‘The world compared to a ship without a rudder.’—If Israel, as a nation, be the rudder to this ship, as the rudder was made so very long after the ship, and has had so very little connexion, in any age, with the greatest part of it; no wonder that the ship has been tossed about by storms. But it is a wonder, that men will amuse themselves and one another with these fancies, on the brink of death, and of an eternal state of happiness or misery; and upon subjects intimately connected with that awful alternative.

P. 61. l. 5, 6. ‘This compass, &c.’—That Israel should be the foundation of the law of Moses, and that law the compass of a ship, and that ship the world; and that the law of Moses, the ritual part especially, never known to one part out of a hundred, or a thousand, of the world, are very wonderful things: but they do not at all affect the question, Whether Jesus be the promised Messiah or not.

L. 17. ‘Come then, &c.’—God gave Israel his sabbaths, but they greatly polluted them.* This seems the short history of this ‘blessed pair.’—The question about the sabbath, as far as Christianity is concerned, will ere long be considered: and I by no means deny, that the sabbath, as given to Israel, was an honourable and important distinction and advantage; but merely to state, that they have little reason to glory in what has been so grievously neglected and perverted.

P. 62. l. 4. ‘Millennium and properly, &c.’—The word millennium is not found in scripture; it simply means a thousand years. It is generally agreed, that these thousand years, of which no intimation is given in the Old Testament,

* Ez. xx. 12. 20, 21.

or in the New, except in the Revelation of John, will be passed under the especial rule of the Messiah, as the acknowledged, and willingly obeyed, King, over all the earth: but that they comprise the whole term of his reign is not only not said, but it is directly contrary to many scriptures; especially that of Isaiah; “Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end:”* and that of Daniel, concerning “the Stone cut out of the mountain without hands,” which “became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.”†

P. 62. l. 6. ‘The opinion of the Gentiles concerning the sabbath.’

L. 7. ‘If I say, &c.’—The views of Christians concerning the law of Moses have been sufficiently explained. Some things further concerning the abolition of the ritual law, as predicted in the Old Testament, will come under consideration, when the priesthood of the Messiah, (a subject wholly omitted by Mr. C.) will call for our attention.

We certainly consider the dedication of a portion of our time, even of one day in seven, as a part of the moral law. It was appointed, as it appears evident to me at least, from the creation; and was merely incorporated into the law of Moses, being of previous and universal obligation. But perhaps it is not so easily ascertained, as at first glance it may appear to be, which of the seven days that constitute our weeks, answers to the seventh day at the creation. A voyage round the world, whether it be entered upon in a westerly, or an easterly direction, always gains or loses one day in the computation. Two navigators setting sail on the same day, one taking his course to the East Indies, and returning by South America; and the other, going by South America, and returning by the Cape of Good Hope; would vary two days in their com-

* Is. ix. 7.

† Dan. ii. 34, 35. 44, 45.

putation of time: as one would proceed according to the daily course of the sun, and lose one whole day; and the other against the course of the sun, and would have one day over. Now which would be the seventh day of the week, to these two navigators? If the sabbath were only obligatory on the inhabitants of one small country, as Canaan, the difficulty would not be found: but if extended to all nations, the sabbath would not consist of precisely the same individual hours, in any of the countries, either to the east or to the west. But, however that may be, it appears to many Christians, provided one day in seven be thus consecrated to the worship and service of God, to the exclusion of all worldly employments, however lawful, if neither necessary, nor connected with piety and charity, that the moral obligation is satisfied. Not that we are to choose the day for ourselves: but that the determining which of the days by our great Lawgiver, is a matter of positive appointment, and not of moral or immutable obligation. From the creation to the giving of the law, the seventh day was appointed, in commemoration of the creation being completed; “pronounced very good,” and rested in by the great Creator. And, though the intervention of the fall greatly altered the state of this lower creation, and of man especially, the original appointment continued. It appears to me also, (though this is not undisputed,) that the Mosaick sabbath was instituted on the same day of the seven: but the redemption from Egyptian bondage was added, as one great benefit to be commemorated by Israel on the sabbath; and this redemption we consider as typical of spiritual redemption by Jesus Christ. We, however, are satisfied, that “the Lord even of the sabbath day,” Jesus Christ the Son of God, has, by his authority, changed the instituted part of the command, and has appointed the first day of the seven, instead of the last, in commemoration of his resurrection: because that event, as completing his work of redemption, was of far greater importance, and an infinitely greater benefit to fallen man, than creation without redemption would have been. Our observation of the first day, as the Christian sabbath, is not ‘derived from what ‘Paul said;’* but from the general language of the New Testament, and the general practice of the primitive Christians, in the apostles’ days. It is by the apostle John called “the Lord’s day,”† (τη Κυριακη ημερα, as St. Paul calls the eucharist, Κυριακον δειπνον.)‡ The same authority which, as we suppose, abolished the other festivals of the ceremonial law, changed the ceremonial part of this law. “The “first day of the week” is, subsequent to our Lord’s resurrection, distinguished from other days;§ and sabbaths are put among those ritual observances which are no longer in force.|| With this the constant practice of the Christian church accords: and every argument, which proves Christianity to be from God, establishes this change in the day of sacred rest. “This is the day which the LORD “hath made: we will rejoice and be glad in it;” for “the “Stone, which the builders refused,” on this day arose, that he might “become the Head-stone of the corner.”* If indeed God said to the apostles on the mount, as we believe, “This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well “pleased; HEAR YE HIM:” and if he, as it is manifest, made known his will to the apostles concerning this change of the day; then the same authority, which appointed the seventh day, for wise and holy reasons substituted the first in its place. But it pleased God, that this change, as some others, should be gradually introduced, rather by apostolical example, than by direct injunction; that no need-

* 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

† Rev. i. 10.

‡ 1 Cor. xi. 20.

§ John xx. 19, 26. Acts xx. 7. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

|| Col. ii. 16.

¶ Ps. cxviii. 22--24. Acts iv. 10, 11.

less stumbling block might be thrown in the way of the Jews.

P. 62. l. 30. ‘Type, &c.’—It is no where in scripture said, that ‘the sabbath is the type of the millennium;’ but if it were, this would confirm the view which we have of it, namely, that in some respects it was a part of instituted worship. The apostle shews, that he considered it as a figure or anticipation of heavenly happiness; when he says, “there remaineth therefore a rest,” (σάββατον, the keeping of a sabbath,) “for the people of God.”

L. 33, 34. ‘They have no right to keep holy, &c.’—To have no right to obey the command of God, seems an uncommon idea, or expression. The rest of the paragraph does not require any particular answer. Christians consider the festivals, as well as other parts of the ceremonial law, as abolished; and they judge that the moral part of the fourth commandment, is obeyed, by observing the Lord’s day, if it indeed be kept as the Lord’s day should be.

P. 63. l. 10. ‘THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.’

P. 64. last line. ‘A little sanctuary.’—It is rather difficult to conceive how many synagogues widely dispersed through distant countries, could be “a little sanctuary.” I have no doubt, but that believing and humble Israelites of old worshipped God by prayer and praise, with acceptance at the synagogues, wherever dispersed: but this was always with a reference to the tabernacle and temple, where alone sacrifices, atoning sacrifices, were appointed to be offered. The NAME and perfections of God,* his grace and providence, and promises, trusted in by a few prudent, pious Jews, was to them as “a little sanctuary;” when they could not go up to the temple. Their worship was accepted, wherever presented, through the ministrations of the priests, and the atoning sacrifices offered “in the place, which

* Ps. xx. 1. Prov. xviii. 10.

“God had chosen to place his name there.”* But since the coming of the Messiah, and the rejection of him by the Jews, we Christians must think, that the efficacy of the typical sacrifices ceased, and that no worship is acceptable from those who reject the Substance of all those types.

P. 64. l. 3—15. ‘SACRIFICES.’—We acknowledge that a broken spirit, and some other things, are “spiritual sacrifices,” of far higher value, than any sacrifices of animals burnt on altars, except when these were offered with reference to the great Antitype and his atonement; but we consider these spiritual sacrifices as required by the moral law, or as connected with the “gospel of our salvation.” Indeed, to speak of synagogues, and the sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving, in answer to the argument that there exists no temple, or any such sacrifices as the ceremonial law prescribed; is merely to evade the conclusion manifestly deducible from the undeniable fact. We simply enquire, ‘Are these the sacrifices appointed by Moses to be offered on the day of atonement?’ Are they offered in obedience to the ceremonial law? The answer is, ‘that in our dispersions we cannot offer these; and we do what we can.’ Be it so; but is not this the very thing that we maintain; that God, in proof that the ritual law is abolished, has rendered the observance of it, in its most essential requirements, impracticable even to those who would observe it? We allow, that the moral law remains in full force: but that the ritual law of Moses, having answered its purpose, is abolished, and in fact cannot be observed. Now to shew, that sacrifices required by the moral law, or, certainly not appointed in the ritual law, may still be offered by the Jews, even in their dispersions, confirms, instead of answering, our argument.

L. 9. ‘Now when, &c.’—It is no part of our present

* Is. viii. 13—15.

concern, to enquire into the nature of the services, said to be performed by the Jews, in the synagogue on the day of atonement: this at least is certain, that they do not, and cannot, perform the sacrifices and ceremonies, instituted in the sixteenth chapter of Leviticus. The temple, the holy of holies, the high priest; his own sin-offering, the sin-offering for the people; the two goats, and the entrance of the high priest into the holiest, with the blood of the sacrifices, and the burning of incense; these, and other things, essential to the observance of that day, as a part of the ritual law of Moses, and typical of good things to come, have been wholly disused for above seventeen hundred years.

Several parts of the ritual law may be performed by the Jews in their dispersions, and some are attended to: but who can read the books of Moses, especially Leviticus, without a deep conviction, that the priesthood of Aaron's family, the altar, the sacrifices of innocent and clean animals, with the shedding and sprinkling of blood, and the burning of incense; as connected with the tabernacle, the holy of holies, the ark, and the mercy-seat; are the most appropriate and central parts of the ritual law? In fact all the rest had such an intimate connection with these, that, take away the sanctuary, priesthood, and sacrifices; and the whole must appear as broken and scattered fragments of a fabrick, once grand, but now irrecoverably destroyed and shattered to pieces. "Almost all things were "by the law purged with blood, and without shedding of "blood, there was no remission." From the entrance of sin, till the death of Christ, this principle pervaded every dispensation: but a short time after that event, this was entirely superseded. Christians offer no sacrifices, with shedding of blood; and for seventeen hundred years, Jews have offered none. This extraordinary change, this sudden cessation of the whole system of blood shedding, which had continued from the fall of Adam, as connected with acceptable worship of the true God, must surely require some explanation; and that, however it took place, whether by express divine appointment, as Christians suppose, or by the dispensations of Providence, as the Jews must allow; for chance and fortune are out of the question; in one way or other, "it is the LORD's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."—And here, I shall introduce a few remarks on a subject, wholly omitted by Mr. C. namely, the PRIESTHOOD of the promised Messiah. He indeed admits, that priests, as well as kings and prophets, were anointed under the law: (p. 5,) and if so, they were typically MESSIAHS; but he waves all further notice of this part of prophecy. Had we no other evidence of Messiah's priesthood than that to be derived from types, analogy, and intimation of a sacrifice for sin to be offered by the Messiah; the proof might perhaps be rejected as inconclusive.—But it is most explicitly predicted of the Messiah, and in a Psalm, which Mr. C. does not deny to belong to him; "The LORD hath sworn and will not repent; Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedek."* It is also foretold by Zechariah, "Behold the Man, whose name is the BRANCH: and he shall grow up out of his place; and he shall build the temple of the LORD. Even he shall build the temple of the LORD; and he shall bear the glory; and he shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a Priest upon his throne; and the counsel of peace shall be between them both."† It is in vain to attempt explaining this, either of Zerubbabel or of Joshua. Zerubbabel, even if his authority might be considered as that of "a king upon his throne," (which was far from the case,) was not, and could not be a PRIEST. Joshua, the priest, did not sit and "rule on his throne:" but the two persons, exercising separately, the ruling and the sacerdotal office, formed a type and shadow of "the BRANCH,"* in whom the two characters of King and Priest would combine; and from this union, "the counsel of peace" and reconciliation between God and man, would be accomplished.

* Ps. cx. 4.

† Zech. vi. 12, 13.

The Messiah was, as all acknowledge, to be the descendant of Judah, and of king David; and these prophecies, therefore, of his being a Priest, are in fact express predictions of the abolition of the whole Mosaick ceremonial: according to which, no one, except of the tribe of Levi, and the family of Aaron, might on any account, act as priests. Whatever objections Jews may have to the authority of Paul, it behoves them to enquire, whether his arguments can be answered on this subject. "If therefore perfection "were by the Levitical priesthood; (for under it the people "received the law;) what further need was there, that "another Priest should arise after the order of Melchisedek, "and not be called after the order of Aaron? For the "priesthood being changed: there is made of necessity a "change also of the law: for he, of whom these things "are spoken, pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man "gave attendance at the altar." How could the ritual law of Moses continue in force, under a priest of the tribe of Judah, of the family of David, and "after the order of "Melchisedek?" The Messiah's priesthood, as being "after "the order of Melchisedek," a King and a Priest, at the same time, a priesthood, in which, like Melchisedek, he had no predecessor, and would have no successor; that of one, "who abideth a Priest continually," and for ever; of one whose priesthood was confirmed by an oath, the irrevocable oath of JEHOVAH: all these things, and several other circumstances might be enlarged on; but it suffices for our purpose, that the Messiah was predicted as "a “Priest for ever,” as well as a King; though he was not to arise from the family or tribe, to which by the law of Moses, the priesthood was absolutely restricted.

* Is. xi. 1, 2.

It is remarkable, that Melchisedek, after the brief and indeed obscure, account of him by Moses;* is never once mentioned in the Old Testament, except in this remarkable prophecy of the Messiah: nor in the New, except in this argument of the apostle to the Hebrews, concerning the ritual law; and as shewing, that it was especially a type of the blessings of the Messiah’s atonement and intercession. The whole seems to have been arranged by the Holy Spirit for this one express purpose.

If then, the apostle’s argument, (to say nothing of his inspiration,) be unanswerable; (which I venture to say it is,) and the shedding and sprinkling of blood, with the burning of incense, under the law, were shadows of the all-atoning sacrifice of Christ, and his all-prevailing intercession: if he was indeed “the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world;” so that the shedding of blood, even before the law, was needful to remission and acceptance; it is sufficiently clear, why, after his atonement had been made, and his intercession, as our High Priest in heaven, openly revealed; the shedding and sprinkling of blood, and the burning of incense, with the whole institution of the Levitical sanctuary and priesthood, should at once terminate.—The thing signified was come; the sign was no longer needful.—This makes the whole satisfactory on Christian principles; but the cessation of bloody sacrifices after having continued 4000 years, now for above 1700 years, can never be explained on the principles of the Jews. The subject, however, will again come under consideration, when the scriptures relating to the sufferings, death, resurrection, intercession, and glory of the promised

* Gen. xiv. 18—20.

Messiah, (a subject wholly omitted by Mr. C.) shall be brought forward, and distinctly examined.

L. 22. ‘Seventy nations, &c.’—The seventy nations, and the age of Abraham, at the building of Babel, have occupied enough of our attention: the whole is destitute of foundation, and indeed inconsistent with the scripture.

L. 25. ‘The Lord made a covenant with Abraham.—Abraham was seventy years old.’—Moses expressly records that “Abram was seventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran.”* Some time occurred after this, before God entered into covenant with him;† and he was “ninety-nine years of age,” when circumcision, the outward seal of the covenant, was instituted.‡ These scriptural dates are quite sufficient to sweep away the cobweb of the seventy nations, seventy years, seventy descendants, seventy angels, &c. It is wonderful that a Jew, writing on such an argument, and building so very much on these numbers, should not have previously examined the dates of his Hebrew Bible!

P. 65. 1. 12. ‘Every nation, &c.’—Daniel’s words shew no more than that the angel who spake to him was, on that particular occasion, commissioned to aid the kings of Persia. How absurd is it to suppose, that God so left the nations of the earth to guardian angels; that these angels, aiding Persia, or Greece, should fight, by God’s approbation, against each other! or that he should commission one angel to help this nation, and another to help that nation, in direct opposition to one another! just like the gods and goddesses, in Homer’s Iliad, or Virgil’s Æneis!

L. 21. ‘From the destruction of the first, &c.’—It has been shewn, that above six hundred and fifty years intervened between the destruction of the first temple, and that of the second; but, apart from the chronological computa-

* Gen. xii. 4.

† Gen. xv.

‡ Gen. xvii. 1. 24.

tion; the language of the angel, "from the going forth of
"the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," cannot possibly allow us to date the seventy weeks from the desolation of the first temple.

P. 66. l. 1. 'ACCOUNT.—From, &c.'

L. 3. 'From the desolation, &c.'—I shall not stay to enquire how far this computation agrees with one before given. (P. 48.) Neither of them proceeds on any fixed principles of chronology, which can stand the test of examination; and enough has been said to shew, that the seventy jubilees have no foundation in scripture.

L. 13—20. 'By this calculation, &c.'—Mr. C.'s con-jectures in this passage, coincide with those of some Christian expositors of prophecy: but how far recent events operate to deduct from the vast importance given to the French revolution, by these calculations or conjectures, or to subvert the whole system, I do not determine. He who lives at the end of the thirty-six years here mentioned, will know whether the passage printed in capitals has then been verified. A former calculation left 137 years yet to pass, before these expected events: (P. 48:) but 'the end of the things
'seems to have been shortened;' to make it concur with the French revolution: and should the Bourbons be again established on the throne of France, as it is probable that they will, the end may perhaps be again lengthened. I do not, however, at all profess to prophesy from prophecy.
Our posterity will be more competent judges than we are.

P. 66. l. 21. 'Israel is separated for ever from the 'nations, &c.'—There is an important meaning, in which this position is grounded on scripture: Israel will never be finally or totally mixed with the other nations of the earth; but will be gathered from their present dispersions, to reside, as a separate nation, in their own land. But Mr. C. neither is inconsistent with the scripture, nor with himself, when he avers, 'that all the Gentiles will not worship the true God 'even until the last day.' (Two last lines.)

P. 67. l. 1—8. 'Moses foretold, &c.'

L. 11, 12. 'But what, &c.?'—The writer of the thirty-fourth chapter of Deuteronomy, whether Joshua, or Samuel, or some other prophet, previous to the captivity, or Ezra, merely stated the fact; that, at the time when he wrote, "there had not arisen a prophet in Israel like unto Moses, "&c.:"* but he by no means asserted, that 'there never 'will be a prophet equal to Moses.' This indeed would be directly to contradict the words of Moses himself. Christians maintain, that the Messiah (not 'the Messiah of the Gentiles,' as distinguished from some other Messiah,) was predicted, as "a Prophet like unto Moses," and that he was far superior to Moses; and if the Messiah were indeed to be a prophet, (as the name imported, P. 6.) one would suppose, that even Jews themselves would allow him to be a Prophet, at least equal to Moses.

L. 14. 'The text says, I will put my words in his 'mouth, &c.'—God says to Moses, "Thou shalt speak to "him," (Aaron,) "and put words in his mouth, &c."† Does this text prove, that Moses and Aaron did not "speak "face to face" with each other?

L. 17. 'Again, what honour, &c.'—It seems of little use to dispute, whether the prophet, or the high priest in Israel were the more honourable character; especially, as Israel, during so many ages, have had neither the one nor the other. The reader may, however, be reminded, that God instructed even "the child Samuel," as a prophet, to warn and rebuke Eli the high priest,‡ that Josiah sent "Hilkiah, "the high priest, to the prophetess Huldah, to enquire of "God by her."§ "And by a prophet the LORD brought

* Deut. xxxiv. 10—12.

† Ex. iv. 15.

‡ 1 Sam. iii.

§ 2 Kings xxii. 8—14. 2 Chr. xxxiv. 9—22.

“Israel out of Egypt, and by a prophet was he preserved.”* Moses was a prophet, and a priest, and “a king in Jeshurun.” As a priest he anointed and consecrated Aaron and his sons. In this union of the three offices, respecting which anointing was prescribed; and in his being a mediator between God and Israel, and mediator of the Sinai-Covenant, Moses was especially a type of the Messiah. Various other particulars might be mentioned, in which a most remarkable coincidence between Moses and Jesus Christ, appears: perhaps indeed there are more points of similarity, than between any other two persons who ever lived on earth. The above, however, seems the great outline of the prediction delivered by Moses, concerning “a prophet like unto him.” But, even to the close of the Old Testament canon, “no prophet had arisen,” in these respects, at all like unto Moses; nor has there arisen any since, except Jesus Christ. Neither does it appear, according to Mr. C. that there ever will: for he passes over the priesthood of the Messiah, and speaks not very clearly of his prophetic character. Some notice will ere long, be taken of his interpretation of the prophecy, but the application of the prophecy by the apostle Peter, and by Stephen the first martyr of Jesus;† compared with the state of the Jewish nation, ever since they crucified the Lord Jesus, and finally refused to hearken to him; gives immense weight to our interpretation of the prophecy.

We maintain then, that Moses predicted the Messiah, “the Light of the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel,” as “a Prophet like unto himself;” a Lawgiver and King, a Priest and a Prophet, a Mediator of a covenant between God and his people; and as introducing a new dispensation to the worshippers of the true God, which Moses also had done.

* Hos. xii. 13.

† Acts iii. 22, 23. vii. 37.

Every text, in the Old Testament, which speaks of the Messiah, as “sending forth his law;” as “teaching the “people,” as “the Light of the people, and of the Gentiles;” shews that he would be a Prophet and “the Sun of “Righteousness.”*

L. 25. ‘When the Messiah shall come, he will have, &c.’—Some events in Providence, will doubtless occur, during the reign of the Messiah, even according to the notion of the Jews; and these events may be predicted, a long time before they take place. But the word prophet does not necessarily mean, one who foretels future events: but ‘one, ‘who by immediate revelation makes known the will of God ‘to man.’—In every sense we however consider the Messiah, not only as a Prophet, but as, in some respects, the ONLY PROPHET; and all other prophets as speaking to men the revelation which Immanuel hath received from the Father.

P. 67. l. 30. ‘Prophecies of Jesus.’

P. 68. l. 8—18. ‘We shall go backward, &c.’—There is not the slightest shadow of proof, that David wrote the hundred and thirty-seventh Psalm: and indeed the supposition is extremely unreasonable. It is far more likely that Ezekiel did. That the first verse of this Psalm, in which no mention is made of the desolations of the temple, should be assumed to be a prediction of the destruction of the first temple by the Chaldeans; and the seventh, concerning the subversion, not of the temple, but of Jerusalem, and the exultations of Edom over it, should be a prediction of the destruction of the second temple, shews a talent at expounding scripture, which sets criticism at defiance. A plain fact, that Zion was desolated, and that Edom exulted, and a prediction of Babylon’s destruction, form the substance of the Psalm: when this took place, the Psalmist called on the Lord to remember Edom.—Whether events yet future were not also thus pre-intimated, I do not here determine.

* Is. xlii. 1—4. 6, 7. xlix. 6. lv. 3, 4. lix. 20, 21. lxi. 1—3. Mal. iv. 2.

It, however, is not requisite to dwell on these things: no judicious Christian will deny, that our Lord's predictions, in many respects, coincided with those of the ancient prophets, (P. 68, 69.) But the claim of Jesus to be a PROPHET, as predicting future events, and not as merely 'quoting predictions previously delivered by the ancient 'prophets,' is sufficiently supported, in the judgment of all reasonable and impartial men, by the following considerations.—He foretold the total destruction of the temple, so "that one stone should not be left upon another;" and the desolation of Jerusalem, as certainly to take place within the term of the existing generation; subjoining a variety of precedent circumstances, no where in the Old Testament connected with those events, or but obscurely hinted. There was not, when he delivered this prediction, the least probability, that such entire desolations should so speedily occur: and not a single Jew, except the disciples of Jesus, could endure the thought of such desolations, without indignation and abhorrence.* He also added, "They" (the Jews) "shall "be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall "be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the time of the "Gentiles be fulfilled."† This has now been accomplishing for above 1700 years. Daniel and Zechariah had indeed foretold the desolations of the temple and of Jerusalem, subsequent to the captivity; and Moses and the prophets had, in general terms, foretold a long continued dispersion of Israel, for their sins, among the nations of the earth: but the abject subjection of the holy city to the heathen, is not mentioned by the prophets, or even hinted at, except in an obscure and distant manner: especially, the long series of ages, during which "Jerusalem should be trodden

* Acts vi. 13, 14.

† Luke xxi. 24.

“under foot of the Gentiles,” is no where intimated. Yet this event was so unprecedented and so unexpected, that the prediction of it was equivalent to a prophecy wholly original. Not a Jew on earth, (without excepting even the disciples,) with the Old Testament in his hand, had the least expectation of such a catastrophe: and there has not been any period, since the dispersion of the nation, in which the Jews have not expected their restoration long before the present æra. The predictions of the subversion of the ecclesiastical and political estate of the Jews, with the desolations of the temple and city, and immense slaughter of the people, and entire dispersion of the rest, were predicted, as to be accomplished during that generation; and the fulfilment was notorious to all the world. The other parts have been fulfilling through every age to this day: and neither Jew nor Christian knows exactly, when the termination of the dispersion, and rescuing of Jerusalem from the Gentiles, shall take place.

P. 70. l. 6. ‘ORAL LAW.’—L. 3. ‘It is well known, &c.’—We here come to the strong-hold of Judaism, as opposed to Christianity. It was so in our Lord’s time;* and it became so more and more in subsequent ages. The specimen, which Jesus gave of the nature and tendency of this oral law, or “the traditions of the elders,” as requiring a man to break the clearest and most express command of God, written in the law of Moses, rather than fail of compliance with the traditions of the elders, is only one instance out of many, which might be adduced of the same kind. ‘A man ‘may be so bound by them,’ (the traditions,) ‘that he cannot, ‘without great sin, do what God has in his law commanded ‘to be done. So that if he made a vow, which laid him ‘under the obligation to violate God’s law, that he might ‘observe it; his vow must stand, and the law be abrogated.’

* Matt. xv. 3—9. Mark vii. 8—12.

(Jewish Canon in Pocock.) In like manner, the Papists, having established it as a principle, that ‘the traditions of ‘the church’ are of equal authority with the written word, or even superior to it; are inaccessible, (while they adhere to this principle,) to all arguments from the scriptures. ‘The Jews tell us, that at the same time, when God gave ‘unto Moses the written law in Mount Sinai, he gave unto ‘him also the interpretation of it; commanding him to com- ‘mit the former to writing, but to deliver the other only ‘by word of mouth, to be transmitted down from generation ‘to generation by tradition only: from hence the former is ‘called the written, and the other the oral law.’—‘But all ‘this is mere fiction, spun out of the fertile invention of the ‘Talmudists, without the least foundation in scripture, or ‘in any authentick history.’—‘The truth of the matter is ‘this. After the death of Simeon the Just, there arose a ‘sect, called the Tannaim, or the Mishnical doctors, that ‘made it their business to study and descant upon those ‘traditions, which had been received and allowed by Ezra, ‘and the men of the great synagogue,* and to draw ‘inferences and consequences from them; all which they en- ‘grafted into the body of these ancient traditions, as if they ‘had been as authentic as the other; which example being ‘followed by those who afterwards succeeded them in this ‘profession, they continually added their imaginations to ‘what they had received from those that went before them; ‘whereby these traditions becoming, as a snow-ball, the ‘farther they rolled down, from one generation to another, ‘the more they gathered, and the greater the bulk of them ‘grew.—Thus it went on to the middle of the second ‘century after Christ; by which time they found it neces-

* This part, in this learned and laborious writer, though admitted as fact, stands on no scriptural ground; and grants more, than ought to be conceded in the argument.

‘sary to put all these traditions into writing. For they were ‘grown to so great a number, and enlarged to so huge a ‘heap, as to exceed the possibility of being any longer ‘preserved by the memory of men.—Rabbi Judah, the son ‘of Simeon, president of the Sanhedrim, methodically di‘gested all that had hitherto been delivered to them of their ‘law and religion, by the tradition of their ancestors. This ‘is the book called the Mishnah.’—‘This, with the com‘ments on it, make up both their Talmuds, that is, the ‘Jerusalem Talmud and the Babylonish Talmud: the for‘mer is published in one large Folio:—the last edition of ‘the latter is in twelve folios.’ (Dean Prideaux.)

The reader may find in Prideaux's Connection, Part I. Book 5. much more information on this subject: but these extracts must suffice for our present purpose.

An excellent friend of mine* used to say, that ‘a story
 ‘was at first like a bit of wire; but one polishes it, another ‘heads it, and another points it, and so it becomes a pin.’
 Every one, who considers, how circumstantial alterations, in reporting any fact, take place, as it passes from one person to another, even without any intentional misrepresentation, must be aware, that Oral tradition, except in a few simple principles, maxims, and rules, must, without a greater and more constant miracle, than any recorded in scripture, be a most vague and uncertain mode of transmission: especially when interpretations, additions, exceptions, and limitations of six hundred and thirteen precepts, must in this manner be transmitted, from one to another, during the course of three thousand years! But I forget: the snow-ball grew at length too large: it became necessary to write the Oral law; and thirteen folios are filled with it, and with comments on it!

If a man should publish the Bible in English, with all the discordant expositions, which have ever been given of it; it would not be a more heterogeneous mass, than this written and expounded oral law; and it would not contain half, if the tenth part, of the grossly offensive and pernicious things comprised in it.

* Rev. John Newton, Rector of St. Mary, Woolnoth.

Our Lord, who taught his disciples to observe the ceremonies of the Mosaick law, and to obey the scribes as “sitting in Moses’s seat,” and teaching his doctrine; most decidedly protested against “the traditions of the elders,” and taught his disciples and the people to do the same. Nor is there any prospect, of succeeding in our attempts to bring the Jews to embrace Christianity; so long as we, either timidly, or by a mistaken policy, allow them to retire unmolested, behind these entrenchments. These strong holds must fall; or they must be drawn forth from them, to the fair ground of “the law and the testimony,” the written word of God; before our arguments, in other respects, will receive any adequate attention from them.

P. 70. l. 5. ‘Moses received, &c.’—If Moses received the oral law, how is it that he gives no intimation of it, either in connection with other laws, or in his addresses to the people, his charges to Joshua, his prophetick song, or his blessings on the tribes of Israel? How is it that he gives such plain commands of quite a contrary nature?* How is it that the written law was to be set before the people, every seventh year, at the feast of tabernacles,† but not a hint of any other law? Not a hint from Joshua, the next in order, (l. 9,) but the contrary;‡ or from any of the twelve judges, (l. 9,) the next successors mentioned? Some quotations they made from the written law, but no allusion to the oral law. Many of the persons mentioned in this transmission of the oral law, have left us nothing on record; (l. 10—12,) none of them any thing favourable to it.

* Deut. iv. 2. xii. 32.

† Deut. xxxi. 9—13.

‡ Josh. i. 8. xxiii. 6.

Isaiah's appeal is "to the law and to the testimony."* Hosea says, in the name of God, "I have written unto "him the great things of my law;"† but not a word about any oral law. This must be wholly unaccountable, if any such oral law existed. But, in fact, this oral law was not invented, till after the close of the Old Testament canon: and it is never mentioned, in any writings prior to the New Testament, as far as I have any opportunity of learning. Either Josiah had never heard of it, or it was something widely different from the written law; else his consternation at finding and reading the latter would not have been so great.‡ Ezra and Nehemiah ordered every thing according to the written law; constantly referred to it, and read it to the people.§ Malachi calls on the people, saying, "Remember ye the law of Moses."|| Had he been asked, what law, would he not have said, that contained in the Pentateuch?

L. 26, 27. 'Malachi was—the great seal, &c.'—I do not understand in what sense 'Malachi was the great seal of the 'Old Testament,' except as his short prophecy is placed last among the prophetic books of that sacred volume. Nor does it appear, (however his prophecy, that God would "send Elijah, the prophet, before the coming of "the great and dreadful day of the LORD," may be interpreted,) what way it can prove, 'that there should be no 'more a prophet in Israel, until the restoration of Israel.' Not a word is said on that subject in the context; and "the "great and dreadful day of the LORD," evidently means, "the day which shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, "yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble: and the "day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the LORD of

* Is. viii. 20. xxix. 11—13.

† Hos. viii. 12.

‡ 2 Kings xxii. 9—13.

§ Ezra ix. 10—14. Neh. viii. ix. x. 28—39.

xiii. 1—3.

|| Mal. iv. 4.

“hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.” These are contrasted with the opposite character. “But unto you, that fear my name, shall the Sun of righteousness arise, with healing in his wings, &c.” Nothing is hinted about Gentiles: two opposite characters among the Jews are most clearly described, with reference to the preceding chapter:* and the day spoken of is that of dreadful destruction on the proud, wicked, and obstinate Jews; such as took place, at the desolation of Jerusalem and the temple by the Romans, and not that of ‘the Restoration of Israel.’—But even if this were not so; the promise of one prophet being sent, does not necessarily imply, that no other would be sent.

P. 71. l. 1, 2. ‘Each receiver was as God† in his age, as Moses in his age.’—This is assuming a very high ground indeed for the oral law; and it naturally occurs to enquire, ‘Who is the receiver in this present day?’ For he may perhaps prove a rival to “the man of sin,” described by St. Paul, “who opposeth and exalteth himself, above all that is called God, and worshipped: so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God:”‡ especially as oral tradition, not the written word of God, is the sole support of the infallibility of each competitor. If, however, it be answered, that none in this age makes this high claim; we further ask, ‘Who was the last of these infallible and divine receivers?’ And how can we know, whether those, who have since handed down these oral traditions, either by word of mouth, or in large books, have infallibly communicated what they received from the last of those who ‘was God in his age.’ Till these things be clearly ascertained, we remain in the same

* Comp. Mal. iii. 1—6. 11—18. iv. 1—3.

† So it is in Mr. C.’s book: but I doubt whether good is not meant l. 15.

‡ 2 Thes. ii. 3, 4.

uncertainty or hesitation as before; or rather we are the more convinced, that so arrogant a claim must be unfounded.

P. 71. l. 8, 9. ‘The seventy elders, &c.’—Mr. C. before maintained that all Israel were prophets, (p. 29, 30,) but here only the seventy elders. (L. 9. 10.) ‘Only Moses, &c.’—Eldad and Medad, at least, of these prophets, are mentioned.* Will learned and considerate Jews fully approve of this statement: that ‘each of these prophets was as good ‘in his day, as Moses was in his?’ (l. 14, 15.) It may be proper to compare this passage, with what has been before considered, when Mr. C. was interpreting the words, “And “there arose not a prophet since in Israel, like unto Moses, “whom the LORD knew face to face;” ‘Which is,’ says he, ‘that there never will be another prophet like unto ‘Moses.’ (P. 67.) Were the words adduced† added by Joshua? Then Joshua ‘was as good in his age, as Moses ‘was in his.’ The same consequence must follow, whoever added the clause contained in the last chapter of Deuteronomy. But indeed was it possible, that Moses could be ‘more than God in his own age?’ If not, then every prophet and every scribe, according to the account here given, must have been at least equal to Moses. And the farther distant from the death of Moses, we remove the insertion of these words, the greater difficulty must they involve: as not only one prophet, but many prophets, in this sense, “like unto Moses,” and equal to him, had been already raised up, when they were written. The plural number also can never accord to the prediction of Moses, “of a prophet “like unto him:” and GOD did not put his words into the mouth of these receivers;‡ but they put it in the mouth, each of his successor, from age to age, according to the statement here given. It is, however, enough to ask, whether each of them, like Moses, united in himself the

* Num. xi. 6, 27.

† Deut. xxxiv. 10.

‡ Deut. xviii. 18.

distinct offices of prophet, priest and king? Whether each of them was a lawgiver, and introduced a new dispensation of religion, as Moses did? And whether each of them acted as mediator between God and Israel, in establishing a covenant? It was in no wise peculiar to Moses, or to the prophets here mentioned, that 'what they desired of God, he granted them.' It is the privilege of all true believers, as far as they ask according to the will of God.—“Delight thyself in the LORD, and he shall give thee the desire of thy heart.”* Even Moses, when he earnestly desired and prayed, that he might pass over Jordan, was refused.† Samuel prayed all night against the rejection of Saul,‡ but did not prevail. And when Elijah impatiently prayed for death, God did not grant his request.§

P. 72. l. 1. 'GALATIANS.'—This whole passage (p. 72—75) requires little answer. A law concerning any particular description of persons, is no law to those who are not of that particular description. The commands to parents and children, to husbands and wives, in the letter of them, are not binding on those who do not stand in these relations to others. “The woman that hath an husband, is bound by the law to her husband; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband.”|| The same is, in the judgment of the common sense of all mankind, the case of the several laws respecting the priests and Levites, the Nazarites, the lepers, and others. This having been noticed, all the strange speeches put into the mouths of different persons introduced, as actors upon a stage, in these pages, may be left to the reader without any answer; for how can a man break a law, or fall under the condemnation of it, who never was in the situation expressly specified in it?

* Ps. xxxvii. 4.

† Deut. iii. 23—26.

‡ 1 Sam. xv. 11.

§ 1 Kings xix. 4.

|| Rom. vii. 2, 3.

P. 75. l. 11. to p. 76. l. 19. ‘PROOF.—Paul, &c.’—The accusation brought against the apostle, in the passage under consideration, like some others, is supported by no evidence except that of the passage itself in Galatians, which it may be proper briefly to consider: “Abraham believed God, “and it was accounted to him for righteousness.”* This occurred above four hundred years before the giving of the law. “Know ye, therefore,” says the apostle, “that they “who are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. “And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify “the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel “unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be “blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed “with believing Abraham.”† What is there in this, which either an ancient or a modern Jew can disprove? “But as “many,” says the apostle, “as are of the works of the “law, are under a curse; for it is written, Cursed is every “one that continueth not in all things, which are written “in the book of the law to do them.”‡ All the curses denounced in the remarkable chapter from which the quotation is made, are against violations, not of the ritual, but the moral law, which the apostle had principally in view: yet the letter of the several precepts adduced, could not possibly involve in the annexed curse, any one who was not in the situation, or relation, which it described. The verse, which Mr. C. so severely condemns, is taken from the close of the chapter, and it sums up and seals the whole. It stands in our version, “Cursed is he, that “confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them.” It may be literally rendered, “Cursed is he, who shall “not establish the words of this law, to do them:” that is, fully to obey them. Now suppose any man, in the affairs of this life, should hear it said, by the highest legal authority, concerning any law or code of laws, "Cursed

* Gen. xv. 6. Gal. iii. 6.

† Gen. xii. 3. Gal. iii. 7—9.

‡ Deut. xxvii. 26. Gal. iii. 10.

" is he who doth not establish the words of this law, to " perform them : " meaning by cursed, the penalty denounced against the transgressor : would that man, because the word all did not occur, ask the question, Which of the words of this law? And if he did, would not the obvious answer be, All the injunctions contained in it? Should he say, I am not a clergyman, I cannot obey the law to register baptisms, burials, and marriages; must I fall under the denounced condemnation? I am not an exciseman, I cannot obey the law concerning excisemen; must I fall under the condemnation? If we did not think his intellects so far deranged, as to render him incapable of attending to an answer, should we not say, You have nothing to do with these laws; nor can have, unless you take on you the office to which they refer. We should also perhaps add, There are many other laws, under which you live, and which are obligatory upon you; and several of these denounce the punishment of death against transgressors: now, if you keep some of these, but not all; as, for instance, if you do not commit murder, but are guilty of forgery; you will be exposed to this punishment. And if you keep all, for many years, yet at last break only one of them, in one instance, you will become liable to this punishment. There are also many statutes, which relate to you, in your particular station, or profession; and these require likewise your unreserved and persevering obedience: so that, " if you keep the whole law, and offend
" in one point, you are guilty of all ; " and you must " continue in all things written in the book of the law to do " them, " if you would escape condemnation. Would not this be very plain to the common sense of the most illiterate enquirer? And if the person addressed had already broken some law and become liable to punishment: would it not be very intelligible, if you should inform him, that if he should be dealt with according to the law, he must suffer the denounced punishment: that the law could not help him, but he must seek relief from another quarter; even from the clemency of his prince, and from a pardon granted by him? This is precisely the scope of the apostle's argument.

The law of God "is holy, just, and good;" it is "exceedingly broad;" and it is "spiritual," taking cognizance of the heart and secret motives of our conduct. "Thou shalt love the LORD thy God with all thy heart;"—"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." These two great commandments comprise, under their most extensive demand, obedience to numerous moral precepts, which spring from them; and even to every ritual institution as long as it remains in force. Now "he, who doeth these things shall live in them;" but "the soul that sinneth shall die." This is the tenour of the law: if any man hath kept the whole perfectly, and continued in this obedience to the end; "the reward is reckoned to him as of debt," not of grace. But if he has once failed, in any one particular, in thought, word, or deed, whether by omission or commission; the law condemns him and pronounces him accursed; and grace alone, or mercy unmerited, and contrary to his merits, can relieve him, rescue him from the condemnation, or give him the reward. Either he hath "continued in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them," or he hath not.—If he have failed only in one instance by violating one precept; he has for ever forfeited "the reward of righteousness," according to the law, and incurred its awful curse, and the mercy of our King is his only resource. It will no more avail him to say that he hath kept all the precepts but one: than the same plea would in our courts of justice avail a traitor: or to say,

‘I have kept that one also, except in a single instance;’ any more, than for a criminal to say, ‘I never committed any other crime against the law, but forgery, and that only in one instance.’ Still the jury must bring in the verdict GUILTY, and the judge must pronounce the awful sentence. He might indeed add; ‘Circumstances are such, that I shall recommend him to mercy :’ but mercy, is not from the law, but remits the deserved punishment of the law: “Mercy rejoiceth against judgment.” These considerations made David say, “If thou, LORD, shouldst mark iniquity, who shall stand? But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared.”* “Enter not into judgment with thy servant; for in thy sight shall no man living be justified.”† It might easily be shewn, that this sentiment pervades the Old Testament, as well as the New: and that all the approved characters, from the fall of Adam to the close of the Old Testament, sought acceptance with God as *sinner*s, from mercy, by faith; and not by their own obedience to the holy law of God; for in that case, they could not have wanted forgiveness.

The apostle did not intend to shew, that Jews alone, who, refusing the proffered mercy of the gospel, continued to be “of the works of the law,” were “under the curse:” but that this is, and must be, the case of all men; Jews or Gentiles, who, having acted in any thing contrary to their known duty, persist notwithstanding, in justifying themselves, and claim “the reward of righteousness” as a debt, or reward, and not as an unmerited favour. This appears in his subsequent reasoning, which he sums up by saying, “The scripture hath concluded,” (or, shut up together, συνεκλησειε,) “all under sin; that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.”‡

The Galatians in general had been Gentiles; but, after

* Ps. cxxx. 3, 4.

† Ps. cxliii. 2.

‡ Gal. iii. 22.

their conversion to Christianity, other teachers endeavoured to proselyte them to Judaism; and the apostle fortifies their minds against this temptation, by a chain of conclusive reasoning from the Old Testament, which no man can answer. It is also evident, that they had become acquainted with the law of Moses, and were not liable to be imposed on through ignorance. Mr. C. professes to give the whole verse, (L. 17.) as it is in the Hebrew; but he only gives a part of it; and joins his own comment to it, as if it were a part of the text: ‘Which is to say, that he must do and observe ‘all those commandments, that he can, and which may be ‘done:’—words so vague and ambiguous, that it cannot be known, what ideas they convey.

It does not appear to me, that the word all, which the apostle is most severely reprehended for inserting, in the smallest degree alters the meaning of the passage; for were it omitted, what difference of sense would arise from it? If Moses only meant some of the things written in the law; which did he mean to include, and which to exclude? Had the apostle said; ‘He is under the curse who does not continue in these two things, “written in the book of the law “to do them;” namely, “in loving God with all his heart,” and “in loving his neighbour as himself,” the result would have been precisely the same; but the statement would not have been equally obvious and intelligible to every reader.

L. 14. ‘For any person that knows the original Hebrew, &c.’—To this I subjoin: and ‘if any person understand ‘Greek, and will consult the Septuagint, he will see, that ‘what I am about to say is true,’ viz. That St. Paul quoted the text, as he found it in the Greek translation, made by Jews, before the times of our Lord Jesus Christ. He wrote to those, who used this Greek translation; it expressed the original with sufficient exactness for his purpose; and he took it as he found it, not indeed verbatim, as the learned reader will observe in comparing the texts; but so far, as to take the word all, which is here so strongly and severely objected against, from that translation. No doubt he quoted from memory; but the quotation conveys precisely the same meaning as the Septuagint version.

These ancient translators did not mean 'to deceive the 'Gentiles,' (L. 20.) by inserting the word ($\pi\alpha\sigma\iota$) all: but if there were any such intention, the blame belongs to them, not to the apostle; unless any should think, that he was to blame, as a Christian, to pay so much deference to a translation made by Jews.

If Christians adduce this text against the Jews, as "under "the curse," in any other sense, than as other unbelieving and unpardoned sinners are, they misapply it; for that was not the apostle's object in quoting it. He meant to teach all men, both Jews and Gentiles, the difference between "the righteousness of faith," and "the righteousness of "works;" "the covenant of grace," and 'the covenant of 'works.' If it be applied exclusively to the Jews, by professed Christians, with self-preference and severity or contempt of the Jews, it is a very unchristian conduct.

The word all, in the translation of the original text in Deuteronomy,* being in Italicks, marks that it is not in the Hebrew: and, in my opinion, it would have been better not to have inserted it. Such insertions are, in some cases, necessary to give the meaning in the English idiom: but where not absolutely necessary, they constitute a paraphrase, or a comment, instead of a translation: and this would be better avoided, even if it were only to prevent cavils and objections. It is, however, certain that the translators were not influenced by a desire to please St. Paul, (P. 75. last line.) (for, why should they?) much less to offend God: but, in fact, they paid in this, as in some other instances, too great deference to the Septuagint: and, doubtless, their reverence of the apostle's words, as the language of inspiration, induced them the rather to do it. But if indeed they acted improperly in this, a reproof, even in far milder language than that given by Mr. C. would have come with an ill grace from one, who has himself taken such unwarrantable liberties, in quoting scripture, as have already been pointed out. If, 'in the day of judgment,' the venerable translators of the Bible, have nothing worse than this to answer for; their honest and very able endeavours to give their countrymen the word of God, in their vernacular language, will meet with a gracious recompense. The word might indeed be well spared; but it does not, in the smallest degree, alter the meaning of the text: and, in conceding thus much respecting our version, in a few instances, I feel as if I needed an apology:—Ubi plurima nitent, haud ego paucis offendar maculis.

* Deut. xxvii. 26.

P. 76. l. 6—19. 'Lct them, &c.'—It would be well for both Jews, Christians, and Gentiles, to "give the more earnest heed" to the texts of scripture here quoted: but the reader may not at first perceive, for what purpose the words of God to Balaam are added. The subsequent paragraph will explain it.

L. 20—24. 'Conclusion.—The blessed, &c.'—God blessed Israel, and Balaam wanted to curse them; and it is here insinuated, that St. Paul, and Christians approving his argument, in the text which has been considered,* imitate Balaam, in this conduct. But neither the apostle nor his expositors, nor well informed Christians, so much as attempt to shew that Israel, or unbelieving and disobedient Israelites, are "under the curse," in any other sense, than all other unbelievers, and impenitent sinners are; or than they themselves were, till "they fled for refuge" to the covenant of grace, the righteousness of faith, and the salvation of the gospel. Yet Moses, or God by Moses, addressing Israelites exclusively, both in the chapter from which the text is quoted, and in other places, hath gone much beyond this in pronouncing a curse on disobedient Israelites.* And so far was the apostle, and so far are we, from desiring with Balaam, that Israel should be curst; that it may confidently be said, Even Moses himself did not more earnestly desire “that Israel should be blessed” than the apostle did;† and we would zealously endeavour to imitate his example. I am conscious, in the sight of God, that this is my prevailing motive in this publication; and I cannot doubt, but it is that of the London Society, and its best friends.

* Gal. iii. 10.

But where, in the books of Moses, or in the Old Testament, is the blessing engaged to Israel, merely as ‘having the law given them,’ without any respect to their obedience or disobedience? In the face, however, of the awful curses, on those who broke particular precepts, and did not confirm the law by doing it; as well as many other passages to the same effect; Mr. C. seems to take for granted, that the blessing contained at the close of Moses’s prophecy concerning the tribes of Israel;‡ belongs to every individual Israelite and every proselyte, however rebellious and hardened in impenitency! But this subject will again require our notice.—“Keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments.”—This was Daniel’s view of the subject.§ There are some sentiments, charged on different descriptions of men, which it is very difficult to believe they really maintain. When the apostle expostulates with his countrymen, “Behold, thou art called a Jew, and restest in the law, and makest thy boast of

* Deut. xi. 26—28. xxvii. 14—26. xxviii. 15—20. xxix. 19—21.

† Ex. xxxii. 32. Rom. ix. 1—3.

‡ Deut. xxxiii. 29.

§ Dan. ix. 4. x. 4.

“ God ; and knowest his will, and approvest the things that “ are most excellent, being instructed out of the law : and “ art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a “ light of them which are in darkness ; an instructor of the “ foolish ; a teacher of babes ; who hast the form of “ knowledge, and of the truth in the law. Thou there“ fore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself ?
 “ thou that preachest, A man should not steal, dost thou “ steal ? thou that sayest, A man should not commit adul“ tery, dost thou commit adultery ? thou that makest thy “ boast of the law ; through breaking the law, dishonour“ est thou God ? ” * In reading this, I say, it is difficult to conceive, that the apostle could be combating an opponent, who avowed such sentiments. It is scarcely credible, that men should “ trust in the law,” “ boast in God,” and keep up that confidence, while guilty of the grossest and most scandalous violations of the law ! Yet this was the case in the apostle’s days, and in that of the prophets. †
 And we may therefore be the less surprised, at hearing a similar confidence avowed in our days. The words before noticed may perhaps recur to the reader’s mind, on this occasion. ‘ Israel is still Israel ; ’ the same as in ancient days.
 (P. 58. l. 16.) The Gentiles may be saved by keeping the precepts of Noah, but Israelites and proselytes by receiving the law of Moses.

L. 30. ‘ QUESTION RESPECTING THE DISPERSION OF ‘ ISRAEL.’

P. 77. l. 19. 20. ‘ To convert the whole world, &c.’—
 Then ‘ the whole world will at length be converted to the ‘ true worship of the only God of Israel.’ This I believe ; and likewise, that the dispersion of Israel will eventually be over-ruled as one grand means of accomplishing this

* Rom. ii. 17—24.

† Is. xlvi. 1—5. Jer. vii. 7—10.

most blessed object. Mr. C. however, before denied, that this would ever be the case. (P. 66. last three lines.)

P. 78. l. 26. ‘In this night was burnt the first and second temple.’—This I suppose is learned from tradition, and it may be true for any thing I know to the contrary.

P. 79. l. 11. ‘That is, 490 years, &c.’—Daniel’s prophecy was delivered nearly seventy years after the destruction of the first temple; but this subject has repeatedly been considered.

Last line but one. ‘Spoke with them face to face.’—This was peculiar to Moses; as Mr. C. has before stated.

P. 80. l. 1. ‘As for the rest, &c.’—It is not clear how this statement of the oral law being given to Israel, in general, can accord with what went before: (P. 70. 71.) ‘The oral law,’ however, is now no secret, for it is written in books; and any man may learn the secret, who has money to purchase, and time and patience to read those books.

P. 80. l. 8. ‘Ye shall be to me a kingdom of priests.’—It should be noticed, that this was spoken before any part of either law was given.*

L. 12. ‘The ministers, &c.’—When it is clearly stated, what is here meant by the word ministers; whether servants simply; or ministers of state, or ministers of religion; it may be requisite to give some answer to the passage. The Israelites in general were not ministers of religion: indeed none of them but the priests of Aaron’s family, the Levites, their assistants; and the prophets who were occasionally raised up. And we read in Isaiah, concerning the Gentiles, “I will also take of them, for priests and Levites, saith the LORD.”† The words of Malachi also are of great importance in this argument. Speaking to the priests, he says, “Who is there even among you, that

* Ex. xix. 6.

† Is. lxvi. 19—21.

“would shut the doors for nought? Neither do ye kindle
 “a fire on my altar for nought. I have no pleasure in “you, saith the LORD of hosts; neither will I accept an “offering at your hand. For from the rising of the sun,
 “to the going down thereof, my name shall be great “among the Gentiles: and in every place, incense shall be “offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my “name shall be great among the heathen, saith the LORD “of hosts.”*—But perhaps, the word is used in some other sense. No doubt, Israel has been very honourably distinguished among the nations of the earth: but, alas!
 that people has been as much distinguished by rebellion against God, and persecution of his true ministers, even his holy prophets, as by external privileges. It is, however, cordially allowed, that converted and restored Israel will have a high pre-eminence among the christian nations of the earth. I fully believe, that they will have all that distinguished honour among the nations, which a spiritual mind would be even willing to accept: and that they will cease to desire that domination over other men, to which they now aspire. But when “all the ends of the earth “shall remember themselves, and turn unto the LORD; and “all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him;”
 are these unnumbered millions to have no spiritual pastors and teachers? or none but Israelites? If this is to be the case, a new and more extensive, though more honourable, dispersion of Israel must take place, than any which has ever yet occurred.

L. 24. ‘IDOLATRY TAKEN AWAY FROM ISRAEL.’

Last line. ‘If idolatry had not been taken, &c.’—I believe this remark to be just and well grounded, and that this has not been sufficiently noted by writers on these subjects.
 How far this adherence to the true God has been, and

* Mal. i. 10, 11.

is, that of knowledge, faith, love, and spiritual worship, is another question; respecting which, it cannot be supposed that Jews and Christians should be of the same sentiments.

P. SI. 1. S. ‘All of them, &c.’—In what sense and how far this was true, the books of Ezra and Nehemiah, the prophecies of Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, and the histories of Josephus, as well as the New Testament, best explain: but a melancholy conclusion must be deduced from their combined testimony.

L. 12. ‘To begin their ministry.’—It was certainly a most inauspicious beginning; and the progress and success have hitherto been according to it: but something far better may speedily be expected.

L. 20. ‘You shall go abroad, and make an atonement, &c.’—Where do we learn from Moses, or the prophets, or any part of the Old Testament, that atonement could be made, except either by the condign punishment of the criminals, or by the sacrificing of innocent animals; the shedding and sprinkling of blood; the death of the innocent for the guilty, according to the rites of the law? The apostle states the fact, and his words cannot be disproved. “Almost all things are by the law purged with blood; “and without shedding of blood is no remission.”*

Moses indeed says, after the sin of Israel in making the golden calf, “Peradventure, I shall make an atonement “for your sin. And Moses returned unto the LORD, “and said, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and “have made them gods of gold. Yet now, if thou wilt “forgive their sin, and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out “of thy book which thou hast written. And the LORD “said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, “him will I blot out of my book.”† As if he had said, ‘O Lord, instead of destroying Israel as a sacrifice

* Heb. ix. 22. † Ex. xxxii. 30—33.

‘to thy justice; let me be the sacrifice, and spare them.’ The answer of God seems to imply, that this was his meaning; and that by this disinterested proposal, he hoped to make an atonement: but it could not be acceded to. Phinehas also “made an atonement for the children of “Israel,” that is, by the condign punishment of the daring criminals.* “He executed judgment, and so the plague “was stayed.”†

L. 27. 28. ‘All those families, &c.’—I doubt not, but individuals and nations have suffered, and will suffer, severe punishment, for their cruel oppression of Israel. But Jews should remember, that their ancestors shed the blood of their own prophets and righteous men, and were the most sanguinary persecutors of Christians. All parties are deeply criminal: may God give all, concerned in this hateful work, true repentance and forgiveness; and teach them that, forgiving one another, they may henceforth only “strive together in love and good works.” Surely, however, those who shall be the friends and helpers of Israel, at his Restoration, will not be involved in the vengeance inflicted on his obstinate enemies.

Last line. ‘One bushel of fine wheat, &c.’—Moses and the prophets give a far different view of the nation.‡ Israel, before he is restored, must be humbled, and made “to loathe and abhor himself; and to acknowledge, that “God hath wrought with him, for his own name’s sake “and not according to his evil deeds;” otherwise he would have been utterly consumed. Till the Jews cease to boast and be “haughty, because of their holy mountain” and their special distinctions, their dispersion will continue. But when God shall “pour out upon them the spirit of grace “and supplication,” they will use a far different language.§

* Num. xxv. 13. † Ps. cvi. 30. ‡ Deut. xxxi. 16—18. xxxii. 21—28. Am. ix. 1—10. § Zeph. iii. 11. Zech. xii. 10.

"That thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and "never open thy mouth any more for thy shame; when "I am pacified unto thee, for all that thou hast done,
 "saith the LORD."* "For I will take you from among the "heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will "bring you into your own land. Then will I sprinkle "clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all
 "your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you.
 "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will "I put within you; and I will take away the stony "heart out of your flesh, and will give you an heart of "flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you, and "cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep "my judgments and do them. And ye shall dwell in the "land that I gave unto your fathers; and ye shall be
 "my people, and I will be your God."—"Then shall ye "remember your own evil ways, and your doings that "were not good; and shall loathe yourselves in your own
 "sight for your iniquities, and for your abominations.
 "Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it "known unto you. Be ashamed and confounded, for your "own ways, O house of Israel."† From prophecies of this kind we learn, "the restoration of Israel:" and we also learn, what restored Israel will think and say concerning their own character and conduct, and those of their ancestors from age to age.

P. 82. 1. 5. 6. "This people have I formed for my- self; they shall shew forth my praise," 'but not the 'Gentiles.'—Any one, not acquainted with the writings of Isaiah, would suppose that the concluding clause was quoted along with the rest from him; and marked with Italicks, to put additional emphasis on it: but it is in fact Mr.
 C.'s addition to Isaiah's words; which has no ground to

* Ez. xvi. 63.

† Ez. xxxvi. 24—32.

rest on either in the passage quoted from the prophet, or in any part of the scripture: "Praise the LORD, all ye nations, praise him all ye people."* "Sing to the LORD a new song, and his praise from the ends of the earth; ye that go down to the sea, and all that is therein; the isles and the inhabitants thereof. Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice, the villages that Kedar doth inhabit: Let the inhabitants of the rock sing; let them shout from the top of the mountains. Let them give glory unto the LORD, and declare his praise in the islands."† Do Israelites exclusively inhabit "the isles of the sea," and "the villages of Kedar?"

L. 24. 25. 'But now no excuse, &c.'—Mr. C. sees the propriety of leaving the Gentiles "without excuse:" and it would be well, if he were fully aware, that Israel is, and will be, without excuse also at the great day of God. The apostle has proved, that both Gentiles and Jews are without excuse; and "that every mouth shall be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God."‡ Here at least is impartiality in the charge or verdict. It must, alas, be added, that the conduct and character of Israel, throughout their dispersions, has not generally been suited to produce the conviction, that they are the true people of God, and theirs the true religion. This is intimated by the prophet: "And ye shall behold their ways and their doings; and ye shall be comforted concerning all the evil, which I have brought upon Jerusalem. And they shall comfort you, when ye see their ways and their doings: and ye shall know, that I have not done without cause all that I have done in it, saith the Lord God."§ "And I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries: according

* Ps. cxvii. 1. † Is. xlii. 10—12. ‡ Rom. i. 20. ii. 1. iii. 9—20.
§ Ez. xiv. 22, 23.

“to their way, and according to their doings, I judged them. And when they entered among the heathen, whither they went, they profaned my holy name, when they said to them; These are the people of JEHOVAH, and are gone forth out of their land.”*

P. 83. l. 7. 8. ‘They preached wonderful sermons, &c.’ The ‘wonderful sermons,’ which will be made effectually successful, in the conversion of the Gentiles, have not yet been preached by dispersed Israel. We, however, confidently expect that they will be ere long; and that their conversion to their long rejected Messiah, accomplishing, after so astonishing a manner, the prophecies of scripture respecting the nation, will be “as life from the dead,” to the world at large. But the wonderful sermons here intended, are of a widely different nature. “Fifteen hundred of them took knives, and stabbed their wives and children, &c.” (L. 13. 14.)—Was this done according to the law of God, or directly contrary to it? Was it not atrocious murder, rebellion, and desperation? Was it suited to convince the persecutors; that they, the Jews, were the true “people of God?” Was it not calculated to fill them with abhorrence of both them and their religion? Let any man compare it with the mild, dignified, and firm conduct of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, when the fiery furnace was before their eyes; or that of Daniel, in the prospect of the lions’ den; or that of Jeremiah, in the hands of his persecutors;† or even with that of the Maccabees, under the cruel persecutions of Antiochus: and let him ask himself, Which was more consonant to the command of God, or suited to produce a favourable impression on the beholders? The conduct of the wretched Jews was indeed a fulfilment of the words of Moses: “Thou

* Ez. xxxvi. 19—21. See also Deut. xxix. 22—23. 1 Kings ix. 6—9. Jer. xl. 1—3. Lam. iv. 13—16.

† Dan. iii. 16—18. vi. 10—23. Jer. xxvi. 12—5

“ shalt be mad for the sight of thine eyes, which thou shalt see.”* I do not mean to palliate the conduct of those detestable wretches, who drove the poor Jews to this madness and desperation.† It was hateful beyond expression.

L. 20. ‘ They must have a good reason, &c.’—Can any man have a good reason, for committing the most atrocious complicated murder of the nearest relatives, and closing the horrid scene, with suicide? The persecuted saints, from Abel to the close of the Old Testament, neither murdered themselves nor others; but meekly and patiently adhered to the LORD; leaving to their persecutors exclusively the guilt of the murders committed by them. If the Jews never preach other sermons than these ‘shocking sermons,’ (l. 20,) no good effect on the nations will follow: but when they become the lowly disciples of him, “who was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before his shearers was dumb;” he will teach them other lessons, and they will preach far other sermons. Then indeed, “the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people, as the dew from the LORD, as the showers on the grass, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men.”‡ Then also the prophecy of Zechariah, will receive a far more full accomplishment, than it has hitherto done.§ (P. 84. l. 1—6.)

P. 83. l. 24. ‘ Christians boast very much about this new law.’—It may be confidently said, that if any called Christians do indeed thus boast very much of a new law, they know little or nothing of the real nature, of Christianity; as both their boasting, and their language about a new law, shew. We desire to induce Israel to look unto him, “who is the end of the law for righteousness, unto every one that believeth.”

* Deut. xxviii. 32—34.

† Ec. vii. 7.

‡ Mic. v. 7.

§ Zech. viii. 20—23.

L. 25. ‘Their new law permits them, &c.’—Certainly no law of God warrants Christians to murder Jews; any more than any law of God warranted the fifteen hundred Jews to murder their wives and children and themselves. So far from it, that Christianity requires us, to do all the good in our power, even to the Jew, who would persecute and destroy us, if such there now be.

P. 85. l. 2. ‘Perhaps, &c.’—They, who have murdered or injured the Jews, will, unless truly penitent, suffer condign punishment. We, indeed, who have never personally, either committed this atrocious crime, or approved it in others, cannot ‘repay the blood of Israel.’ But we would “do what we can;” and we desire, by way of compensation of past injuries from men called Christians, to treat Israel with all candour, benevolence, and compassion; and to pay some little of the immense debt, which we acknowledge ourselves to owe to their progenitors, through whom we enjoy all our invaluable blessings. This exclusively is the object of the London Society.

L. 4. ‘A way, &c.’—It must also be allowed, that immense injustice has been done to the Jews by slanders and false accusations, which, in many cases, are as pernicious and cruel, as more direct murder: but it would be well, if the Jews would endeavour to refute these, by a strict adherence to equity, truth, and mercy. However guilty their revilers, I fear the epithet innocent does not belong to the Jews: and I would simply ask, has nothing in the conduct of the Jews given even plausibility to these calumnies? I do not ask this, to excuse, in any degree, the calumniators; but to suggest an useful hint to the calumniated.—We ought not to speak, to the injury of others, even what we know to be true, unless we have some good reason for doing it.

P. 85. l. 20. ‘THE TITLE OF ISRAEL.’—The word Title

is not scriptural, nor does the import of it clearly appear: but I suppose it means the right and title to temporal dominion over the nations. The texts, however, afterwards adduced, (L. 23—35,) speak nothing concerning this right or title; but merely state, that God will no more disannul or violate his covenant with Israel, than he will terminate or alter the ordinances of the sun and moon.

L. 22. ‘No Israel, no world.’—It is both scriptural and reasonable, to maintain, that all things in creation and providence have been so ordered and constituted, as to forward the eternal good of all the spiritual worshippers and holy servants of God;* and in subserviency to the display of his glorious perfections, and the interests of true religion. But that all things, relating to the immense multitudes of those, who have hitherto inhabited, or shall hereafter inhabit, this globe, without any distinction of character and conduct, should be as nothing, in the view of their common Creator; except as the temporal aggrandisement of one small nation, often most wicked, rebellious, and ungrateful, is concerned; is wholly unscriptural, and unreasonable, nay, even monstrous!

Last line. ‘Israel, who observes the covenant, &c.’—But what becomes of that very large part of Israel, which does not ‘observe the covenant of God?’ “Which my covenant they brake.” “They have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant.”† This is the very thing on which we insist.—“Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a true heart.”‡ We consider none of the descendants of Abraham, as a part of the true Israel, except those, who inherit his obedient faith: and we suppose the promises as made to them exclusively, and not as including all those, who from age to age, have lived and died, unbelieving, disobedient, impenitent, unconverted rebels and enemies. It is true, that, taught by the

* 1 Cor. iii. 21—23. 2 Cor. iv. 15. † Is. xxiv. 5. ‡ Ps. lxxiii. 1.

New Testament, we consider the nation of Israel, as a kind of type of the true Israel; viz. of all, whether of the race of Israel, or of Gentile extraction, who are the believing, obedient, and spiritual, servants and worshippers of the God of Abraham. The apostle expresses our views of this subject, when he says of Abraham; “He received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith, which he had yet being uncircumcised; that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also: and the father of circumcision to them, who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of the faith of our father Abraham, which he had, being yet uncircumcised.”† Some proof that the term, Israel, admits of this application, might be adduced even from the Old Testament: but, as it is peculiarly the doctrine of the New Testament, it is not to be expected that Jews will receive it; and this hint shall here be urged no further.

P. 86. l. 3. ‘Rachel is called the moon, &c.’—Rachel was dead, before Joseph had this dream: but whoever was spoken of, their doing obeisance to Joseph, not others doing obeisance to them, was evidently meant.†

L. 12. ‘Moses divided the sea, &c.’—Jesus “walked on the sea,” and he “commanded the winds and the waves and they obeyed him.” The texts adduced, (L. 12—25,) however, only prove, that some individuals in Israel wrought miracles, which no Christian denies. ‘But miracles are a poor and miserable defence, &c.’ (P. 26. l. 29.) It seems, when miracles are wrought for Israel, or by Israel, ‘the case is altered.’

L. 23. ‘Angels are not called the sons of God, &c.’—“When the morning-stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy.”‡

L. 26. ‘We do not find, &c.’—Angels did not, and could not need the ministry of Israel, and Israel had no power of ministering to angels; but an angel ministered unto Hagar, who was not of Israel.* Angels brought Lot, who was not of Israel, out of Sodom.† An angel also instructed Eliphaz.‡

* Rom. iv. 11, 12. † Gen. xxxv. 15—20. xxxvii. 9, 10. ‡ Job xxxviii. 6, 7.

P. 87. l. 4. ‘Erellim, &c.’—Rather Erallam, as the Masorites have properly pointed it. The word occurs in two places, and no more, and is translated “lion-like-men.”§ The word rendered here angels, means, messengers or ambassadors. When Sennacherib invaded Judah, Hezekiah’s lion-like-men cried out; and the ambassadors whom he sent to meet Rabshakeh and treat about peace, returned with their clothes rent, and no doubt with bitter lamentations over the deplorable condition of their country. The idea of angels mourning and weeping has no support in scripture nor is it at all reasonable in itself.

L. 12. ‘THE TITLE OF THE GENTILES.’

L. 19. “All nations before him are as nothing, &c.”||—Is it here meant, that in this respect Israel is an exception to this general rule? The other texts, quoted in this paragraph, are parts of distinct prophecies: the first and second, of the destruction of Sennacherib’s army; and the fourth, of the vengeance of God on Edom. Probably, in this, the enemies of the people of God are designated under a general name, and future events are also predicted: but by the same rule of interpretation, all the friends, the spiritual worshippers, and believing servants of God, are designated by the name Israel. The texts prove nothing in the main argument.

L. 26. ‘THE LAST FORTUNE OF THE GENTILES.’—The word fortune, in this application is objectionable, as it has already been shewn. (On P. 18.)

L. 28. ‘Will they not acknowledge, &c.?’—Certainly all the evil, and all the good likewise, which God has predicted

* Gen. xvi. 6—14. xxi, 17—19.

† Gen. xix. 1—22.

‡ Job iv. 12—21.

§ 2 Sam. xxiii. 20. 1 Chr. xi. 22. || Is. xl. 17.

concerning the nations, and concerning Israel, shall be accomplished. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but his word shall not pass away." It only remains to be shewn, what evil, and what good, is predicted respecting the Gentiles and Israel: for Christians are not required to acknowledge, that all the conclusions of Jews, concerning these predictions, are well grounded.

L. 54. 'It is now 1744, &c.'—This is more accurate, than the preceding calculation, but not so well suited to complete the seventy jubilees. (P. 66.)

Last line. 'King David foresaw, &c.'—It is not said, in the title, that the forty-fourth Psalm was written by David; and indeed it is highly improbable. Mr. C. applies it to the present dispersions of the Jews: the apostle quotes it, concerning the persecutions of the Christian church.* The following words, "All this is come upon us; yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant: our heart is not turned back, neither have our steps declined from thy ways;"† seem to render it inapplicable, either to the Babylonish captivity, or the present dispersion of Israel. The whole, indeed, is far more suited to the situation of a company "suffering persecution for righteousness' sake," than to any people enduring miseries as the punishment or chastening for their sins.‡ If, however, the Jews think this applicable to their case, during the 1744 years spoken of, because they have not been guilty of gross idolatry, it would answer little purpose to contest the point. When God shall "pour on them the Spirit of grace and supplications," they will see the matter in another light.

The passage, quoted from the apostle Paul, refers entirely to the final judgment of the world, and the eternal state of individuals; and to the precedency "in tribulation and anguish" of wicked Jews over wicked Gentiles.§

* Rom. viii. 36. † Ps. xlv. 16—18. ‡ Ver. 20—22. § Rom. ii. 9—16

P. 88. l. 17. ‘Do they imagine, &c?’—The Messiah will forgive either his crucifiers, or the persecutors of his people, whenever they truly repent, and seek forgiveness from him. But he will not forgive either Jew or Gentile, who does not repent and seek mercy.* I am sorry to add, that such remarks betray a vindictive spirit, in the writer; who, it is evident, judges of the Messiah’s conduct from his own feelings. I make this remark with reluctance, but it must not be repressed. ‘The Messiah forgive.’ (See on P. 7.)

L. 19. ‘The blood of Israel cries, &c.’—This ‘blood of Israel’ includes the blood of the prophets and righteous men shed by the ancient Jews and Israelites; the blood of Stephen, of James, of other apostles, and many other martyrs, as well as the blood of Israel shed by the Gentiles: yea, it includes the blood of Jesus himself. But “his blood speaketh better things, than that of Abel,” which cried for vengeance on him who shed it.† No doubt, the time cometh, when the earth “shall disclose her blood, and no more cover her slain.”‡ Then the blood of Israel, shed by Gentiles, and the blood of Israelites and Christians, shed by Jews, will alike meet condign punishment on all the impenitent and unbelieving; but not on those who repent and flee for refuge to that God, to whom belongeth “mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against him.” The cry of blood for vengeance is not peculiar to that of Israel shed by Gentiles, but is equally spoken of blood shed in murder, to whatever nation the murdered person or the murderer belonged.§

L. 20. ‘And here, &c.’—No Christian doubts, but that “tribulation and anguish” shall come on impenitent workers of iniquity, whether Jew, or Gentile; but ‘our own apostle’ (L. 20, 21.) spoke not of this present world, but of the

* Ez. xviii. 30—32.

† Heb. xii. 24. Gen. iv. 10.

‡ Is. xxvi. 21.

§ Gen. ix. 5, 6.

“day, when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ.”*

L. 28. ‘It is not said, “Rejoice, O all ye nations, &c.”’—Supposing, that only some of the nations were meant, how does it appear, that these were “exclusively those “nations which never troubled Israel?” (L. 30.) Moses says no such thing, nor do any of the prophets. It is however a concession of importance, to allow, that some nations will rejoice with Israel. “Thus saith the LORD “against all mine evil neighbours, that touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit: “Behold I will pluck them out of their land, and pluck “the house of Judah from among them. And it shall “come to pass, that after I have plucked them out, I “will return and have compassion on them, and will “bring them again every man to his heritage, and every “man to his land: And it shall come to pass, that if “they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to “swear by my name; as they have taught my people to “swear by Baal; they shall be built up in the midst of “my people.”† “In that day shall Israel be the third “with Egypt and Assyria, even a blessing in the midst “of the land; whom the LORD of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the “work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance.”‡ Did Egypt and Assyria never trouble Israel? The word all, however, is added in many similar predictions.§ It is undeniable, from these prophecies, that some nations, even of those who have injured and oppressed Israel, shall be built up in the midst of Israel, and rejoice with them.

Last line but one, P. 89. l. 1—12. ‘Whoever shall be,

* Rom. ii. 9—16.

† Jer. xii. 14—17.

‡ Is. xix. 23—25.

§ Gen. xviii. 13. xxii. 18. Ps. xxii. 27. lxxvii. 2. lxxxvii. 17. lxxxvii. 9. cxvii. 1. Is. ii. 2. xxv. 7.

‘&c.’ This question has already been considered: but the Jews would do well to enquire very seriously and impartially, whether the former part of the prophecy here quoted from the second Psalm, was not fulfilled in the events, to which the apostles referred it. “Of a truth “against thy holy child,” (or Son, Παιδα,) “Jesus whom “thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with “the Gentiles and the people of Israel, were gathered “together; for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel “determined before to be done.”* No doubt the Messiah hath crushed and will break, as a potter’s vessel is broken with an iron rod, all nations which persist in opposition to him: but if there would be no mercy for those who submit to him, why was it added, “Be wise now there- “fore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of the earth: “Serve the LORD with fear, and rejoice with trembling. “Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and so ye perish from “the way; when his wrath is kindled, yea, but a little, “blessed are ALL they who put their trust in him.”†

P. 89. l. 11. ‘Conqueror of the world, &c.’—This title of the Messiah is not found in scripture, but doubtless he is and will be ‘the Conqueror of the world:’ and all must either bow to the sceptre of his grace, or be broken by his iron rod. “He must reign till he hath “put all enemies under his feet.”‡ If the Jews have no enemies but the Gentiles; and if the Messiah and his people have no other enemies than human beings of whatever nation, this might be specious. But we consider this evil world, sin, Satan, and death, as especially those enemies, from which the Messiah delivers all his people; and we are firmly of opinion, that Zechariah had these enemies especially in view, when he said, “that he would

* Acts iv. 25—28.

† Ps. ii. 10—12.

‡ Ps. cx. 1.

§ Cor. xv. 25—27.

“grant unto us, that we, being saved from the hand of “our enemies, might serve him, without fear, in holiness
 “and righteousness, before him all the days of our life.”*
 We are, however, very willing to allow, that the Messiah will save Israel from all their Gentile enemies: but to be saved from them is one thing; to be avenged on them, or to exercise lordly dominion over them, is another thing.
 “When a man’s ways please the LORD, he maketh even “his enemies to be at peace with him.”† And if God so influence the minds of the nations, that instead of hating and injuring Israel, they should vie with each other in expressions of love and gratitude to Israel; and in rendering them all the honour, which either reason or scripture can admit to be desirable; one would think it must be as desirable a deliverance, to any but an incurably vindictive and ambitious mind, as the destruction or absolute subjugation of the Gentiles. I think I can answer for tens of thousands in this land, of us poor “sinners of the Gen“tiles,” that we feel no enmity to Israel, no, not to the most hostile Jew; but simply goodwill and compassion; that we seldom forget to pray earnestly for them, according to our views of what would be a blessing to them; and that we could receive no higher gratification, than to welcome the Jews as our brethren in Christ, and partakers of all our advantages. These feelings concerning this dispersed, and cruelly oppressed people, I am happy to say, are getting ground rapidly among christians. May the Lord increase them more and more!

L. 22. ‘This is also confirmed, &c.’—I am of opinion, that the short and inadequate contents, at the head of each chapter, in the common editions of the Bible, would be far better omitted. Certainly, in the instance adduced, a very wrong view is given of the chapter. The title, as it stands

* Luke i. 71--75.

† Prov. xvi. 7.

in the quarto Oxford Bible 1731, runs thus: "The land of Israel is comforted, both by the destruction of the heathen, who spitefully used it; and by the blessings of God promised unto it. Israel was rejected for their sin; and shall be restored without their desert. The blessings of Christ's kingdom." I suppose, that the contents, as annexed by the venerable translators, are contained in the large Bibles, with marginal readings, &c.: but I do not know who abridged them for the smaller editions. It seems, however, to have been done with little judgment. At any rate these contents are simply a comment: and I would, with great deference, as speaking of a Society, which I especially admire and honour, suggest the hint, to the conductors of the British and Foreign Bible Society, should this fall into the hands of any of them, that the retaining of these contents is a deviation from their grand and most important rule of distributing the scriptures without note and comment. The instance here adduced (to which I could easily add very many more,) shews, that the abridged contents sometimes are a highly erroneous comment on the sacred text.

P. 89. l. 24. 'QUESTION.' There is not much argument in the close of these questions. 'Israel hath lost all these things, &c.' (L. 10, 11.) But why cannot God give them all these things, and all other temporal and providential benefits in the same way, by which he delivered their ancestors, and settled them in Canaan? or as he has given them to the Gentiles without a Messiah?

We, "sinners of the Gentiles," want a Messiah to "save us from the deserved wrath of God, from the curse of his law, by enduring it himself;" from "the wrath to come," from our "sins;" "from this present evil world," from death, and him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil: we need to be "saved in the “LORD with an everlasting salvation;” to have “our sins subdued, and buried in the depths of the sea.” We need a Messiah who “by the knowledge of him, shall justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities;” who shall be “a Light to the Gentiles,” and “the salvation of God to the ends of the earth.” Deliverance from sin, and all its consequences; reconciliation to God and recovery to holiness; supports and comforts in our souls, while passing through this vale of tears; hope and exultation in death, and everlasting happiness in another world, are the blessings, which we Gentiles desire from the Messiah. And all, who feel their need of them, and desire them, know that they can be found in no other. Millions, very many millions, have already received these blessings, by faith in Jesus Christ; and increasing numbers shall receive them, till “all nations shall be blessed in him.” Having this salvation, the spiritual mind desires no more: but “the carnal mind,” (which prefers, and values as the best things, those temporal advantages which are enumerated in these questions,) “is death,” and “enmity against God.” Were we satisfied to enjoy these blessings ourselves, and cared nothing about the eternal salvation of the Jews; did we not “count it more blessed to give, than to receive;” and long to communicate our good things, infinitely good things, to them, rather than to share their transient imaginary good things; (which most of the present generation must, at any rate, come short of:) we should leave the Jews to their dream of kings, of lands, of nobles, and riches, and glory; and should never think of advancing a claim, or entering into a competition about them. For we are not only fully convinced, that such a Messiah, bringing a redemption of this kind, will never come: but also, that if such a one did come; the satisfaction arising from his coming, would be “as the dream of a night-vision. It shall even be as when

“an hungry man dreameth that he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and behold he drinketh; but he awaketh, and behold he is faint, and his soul hath appetite.”* “Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher, vanity of vanities, all is vanity.”†

If the Jews wanted a Messiah only for such purposes, as are stated in these questions; it would be comparatively a small matter, should all future generations of Israel live and die, as all former generations have lived and died, without a Messiah. But we “sinners of the Gentiles,” being the race of fallen Adam, ourselves also being disposed to imitate him, having in numberless instances, actually copied his example of ingratitude, apostasy, and rebellion; and being thus involved in his condemnation: we, knowing that “it is appointed to men once to die, and after death the judgment;” and that “in the sight of God shall no man living be justified;”‡ need a Redeemer and Saviour, from the wrath of God, from the curse of his violated law, from the power of the devil, from our own sinful propensities and habits, “and from this evil world.” We want an atonement, which can satisfy Divine justice, and render it honourable to an infinitely holy and just God, to pardon our sins; and one “to bring in an everlasting righteousness,” “for our justification:” we stand in urgent need of an Advocate and Mediator to “appear in the presence of God for us,” to render our prayers and services acceptable to him. We want a mercy-seat, and a High priest before that mercy-seat; “a Priest upon his throne,” who, being “Lord of all,” may render by his power, the sacrifice of his death, and his intercession, as risen and ascended, effectual “to redeem us from all iniquity,” and to “save us from our sins.” We need a Saviour who can “pour upon us the Holy Spirit” to renew us unto holiness, and make us, who are in ourselves “vessels of wrath fitted for destruction,” to become “vessels of mercy prepared for eternal glory.” In short we need a Messiah, who “is able to save to the uttermost all who “come to God through him;” to receive our souls at death, to raise our bodies, incorruptible and glorious, at the resurrection; to silence all accusers at the day of judgment, and to put us in full possession of everlasting glory and felicity.

* Is. xxix. 7, 8.

† Ec. i. 2.

‡ Ps. cxliii. 2.

We are also deeply convinced, that the Jews equally want such a Messiah. “The whole indeed need no physician:” the wise, strong, righteous, and holy, the perfectly righteous and holy, need not such a Redeemer. Yet there is vast danger of deception in this matter, through the excessive self-flattery of the human heart; which is “deceitful above all things,” as well as “desperately wicked.”—“There is a way, that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death.”* And we consider the words of our Lord to the Laodiceans, fairly applicable to this case: “Because thou sayest, I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see.”† But we have no occasion to refer to the New Testament: the ancient prophets often give similar warnings and counsels.‡

P. 89. l. 32. to P. 91. l. 10. ‘The punishment, &c.’—I do not think, that all these quotations from the prophets bear upon the case of Israel, as a nation: but I shall not contest that matter: especially, as the main argument, about Jesus of Nazareth being the Messiah, is not much concerned. I agree with the writer, that God hath severely punished the heathen, who have injured offending Israel; that he will do the same to their future oppressors; and that he will execute dreadful judgments on those, who combine to oppose Israel, when he shall restore that people. But I contend, that all, both nations and individuals, who repent of former injuries, and concur in God's purposes of mercy, to Israel; and all, who, at length renouncing their enmity, shall be cordially reconciled to converted Israel, and disposed to love and honour them, will share Israel's blessedness; and thus, that their restoration "shall be as life from the dead," to the whole earth. This I suppose will be the case of all nations during the Millennium.

* Prov. xvi. 25. Jer. xvii. 9. † Rev. iii. 17, 18. ‡ Jer. ii. 23—35. Hos. xiv. 1, 2.

P. 91. l. 10. 'BY EZEKIEL.'—'In the thirty second, &c.'—This chapter seems to be wholly unconnected with the subject. Nothing is said in it of the fate of 'all nations,' but merely of several nations mentioned by name: as Asshur, Elam, Meshech, Tubal, Edom, and the Zidonians. This emphatical word all, which Mr. C. so severely blames the apostle and our translators for adding, is here introduced by him without any warrant.

P. 91. last line. P. 92, 93.—Mr. C. explains several of these prophecies, nearly as some modern Christian writers have done. The outline of the plan is indeed probable; though the wonderful changes, which perpetually take place, during these eventful times, blot and deface, from time to time, every attempt to fill up that outline. I do not, however, mean to commit myself, as attempting to prophesy from the prophecies: it suffices to observe, that the Messiah is not once mentioned in any one of them. Indeed it seems throughout taken for granted, that he is already come, but that neither Israel, nor the nations at large, have hitherto received him and submitted to him: and that very much violent opposition will yet be made to the establishment of his kingdom throughout the earth; but that all opposition shall eventually be overcome and terminated.

P. 92. l. 30. ‘Circumcised.’—The word, circumcised, does not occur, in any of the prophecies quoted, or referred to in the whole passage: though “uncircumcised,” does in the thirty-second of Ezekiel. This inaccuracy is, however, of no consequence, except as it leads to an acknowledgment, that the Mohammedans are circumcised. As these are computed to be more numerous than Christians; and as circumcision is the GREAT SEAL of Israel; there are very many competitors with Israel for the honour of this external distinction. (P. 17. P. 58. l. 4.)

P. 93. l. 11. ‘Messiah, son of Joseph, &c.’—Hosea says nothing of ‘Messiah, Son of Joseph.’—Judah and Israel shall have “one Head,” and not two. But tradition, I suppose, contradicts the words of Hosea. Sennacherib carried the Israelites captive in the fourth year of Hezekiah; and ten years after, in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah, “he came “up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them.”* Does this prove, that ‘a great part of Judah went into captivity with the Israelites?’

L. 21. ‘We read in Joshua, &c.’—Is then the tenth of Joshua a prophecy, and not a history; or is it both a history and prophecy?

L. 28. ‘Battle of Gog.’—Concerning the battle of Gog we are agreed: but it has been stated, that the closing verses of the second chapter of Joel, relate to other events, even to the awful destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. (Last line but one, &c.) The prophecy in the third of Joel, coincides with the prediction of Gog and Magog by

* 2 Kings xviii. 9—13.

Ezekiel, but includes also, as it appears to me, other events which will occur about the same time.

P. 94. l. 3. ‘Boasting of the Gentiles.’—The apostle warned the Gentile converts at Rome on this subject: “Boast not against the branches; but if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee.”—“Be not high-minded, but fear.”* But, in the course of my reading, I have met with very little boasting of the Gentiles over Israel; not so much in the whole, as there is boasting of the Jews, in this one small tract. The truth is this; the Gentiles, including the bulk of nominal Christians, think very little about such matters: and whatever else they boast of and glory in, it never comes in their way to boast or glory over the Jews, about the dominion under the reign of Messiah. And true Christians, by the same train of serious reflection, in which the comparative situations of the Jews and Gentiles are brought to their thoughts, learn humility, gratitude, and compassion. They consider all “boasting” over others as extremely wicked; and, in proportion as they regard themselves favoured above others, they acknowledge their own unworthiness, give the whole glory to God, who alone hath made the difference, and pray for those, whom they look on as less favoured. And not only so; but they do what they can to impart their peculiar advantages to them also.

P. 94. l. 8. ‘RESTORATION of Judah and Benjamin, &c.’

L. 13. ‘The Gentiles would pay no attention, &c.’—The reader must observe, without my noticing it, that Mr. C. wavers on this subject: and sometimes seems to speak of the Gentiles as brought to worship God by the Jews, and sometimes as wholly neglecting the instructions given them. The text, however, here adduced, proves nothing in this respect; as it only means, that every people will have regard to that object of worship, which they acknowledge as their god; but not that they will never “turn from idols to serve the living and true God;” and the verses which go before, prove directly the contrary: “Many nations shall come and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of JEHOVAH, to the house of the God of Jacob,—and he shall teach of his ways, and we will walk in his paths.”* The worshippers of God profess, that “they will walk in the name of the LORD their God for ever and ever:” yet many of Israel apostatized, and became idolaters; and numbers of idolaters have forsaken, and still greater numbers will forsake, their idols, to worship the true God.

* Rom. xi. 18—20.

L. 24. ‘The worship of Israel, &c.’—If this mean, the worship instituted by the ritual law of Moses, we cannot believe that it will ‘endure for ever and ever.’ We are confident, that it is predicted in the Old Testament, that this ceremonial worship would be put away, when the “Priest after the order of Melchisedek” should come: but, however that might be, it will hardly be maintained, that the worship of heaven will be conducted according to the ritual law of Moses. As to the substance of the worship of Israel, as contained in the law and in the prophets, we firmly believe that it will endure to the end and for ever: and that the Gentiles become the people of God, by joining in that spiritual worship of Israel, of which all their forms were shadows, or prefigurations. But, according to Mr. C.’s statement, what is to be done with the Gentiles? The different forms ‘of worship used by them are to be put away;’ (L. 18—20.) ‘yet they shall not become true worshippers.’ I suppose, it is meant, that in order to their being true worshippers, they must be proselyted, and circumcised, become Jews, and keep the law. If this be intended, it might have been more clearly stated. Malachi

* Mic. iv. 1—5.

however says, or rather the LORD by Malachi, "From the " rising of the sun even to the going down of the same, my " name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every " place, incense shall be offered to my name, and a pure
 " offering; for my name shall be great among the heathen,
 " saith the LORD of hosts."*

L. 27. 'But let us see, &c.'

Last line. 'Forced to acknowledge, &c.'—Nothing is said, in the passage quoted from Jeremiah,† of forced to acknowledge. Every true convert acknowledges his guilt, without compulsion; and so will the Israelites, when converted and restored.‡ "Coming to the LORD from the ends " of the earth," implies a voluntary renunciation of idols, to join his worshippers; if words, when the Gentiles are concerned, can express that idea; and surely there are other ways of "knowing the hand and might of God," besides that of falling victims to his omnipotent vengeance! Supposing, that multitudes of the opposing nations should be crushed by "the hand and power of God;" and others, thus perceiving how immensely superior he is to all the idols of their worship, should submit to him, seek mercy, renounce idols, and become his spiritual worshippers; will not this be a fulfilment of the prophecy? Beyond doubt, this, for substance, was meant by it.

P. 95. l. 7. 'Further we observe, &c.'—Impenitent criminals do not generally 'come of their own accord, without 'being called,' in order to be punished.

L. 16, 17. 'No need to shew miracles, except in Egypt.'—Whether there was, or was not need, many and great miracles both of mercy and judgment were shewn in the wilderness, 'in the time of Moses.'§ And without these, it

* Mal. i. 11.

† Jer. xvi. 19—21.

‡ Zech. xii. 10.

§ Ex. xv. 25. xvi. 11—35. xvii. 5—17. Num. xi. 18—23. 31—33. xiv. 22, 23. 37. xvi. 25—35. 44—49. xvii. 5—10.

does not appear how the people could have been sustained, Moses and Aaron protected; and either the return of the whole company to Egypt, or their entire destruction in the infatuated attempt, prevented.

L. 18. ‘Miracles shall be shown, &c.’—There is no proof of this in scripture. God will work powerfully in restoring Israel; and he may, for ought which is said to the contrary, work miracles of vengeance, like those wrought in Egypt: but that this will be ‘in the whole world,’ is no where intimated, nor is it in the least probable. Christian expositors have drawn many confident conclusions from the obscure prophecy in the eighteenth of Isaiah, not wholly dissimilar from that of Mr. C.: but I, as I cannot adopt, so, I do not presume to oppose, their reasonings: the event must determine. (L. 21—24.)

L. 24. ‘Scattered throughout the whole land of Egypt, &c.’—This directly contradicts the history by Moses. The Israelites dwelt together in Goshen, “and had light in their dwellings,” during the plague of darkness. In what manner were they ‘all brought together in one time?’ (Last line but two.) ‘And how shall the Israelites at their restoration be brought together?’ (Last line but one.) God will do it, no doubt; but will they be miraculously transported, from one country to another? This is no where intimated.*

P. 96. l. 2—20. I will not enter into any argument concerning the texts of scripture here adduced: though it may be well doubted, whether, they all relate to the future ‘Restoration of Israel,’ or not; for I do not deny but that they may be literally fulfilled in that event. But the misquotation of one passage from Isaiah must be noticed. The text is, “Darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people,” or peoples, which includes Israel also. Mr. C. puts "the kingdoms," as excluding Israel. But I apprehend, the calling of the Gentiles in the primitive times, the Restoration of Israel, and the conversion of the Gentiles all over the earth, and the millennium, are all predicted in this chapter.*

* Is. xi. 11—16. lxvi. 19, 20.

L. 31. 32.—'EVERY TRUE SON OF ABRAHAM.'—Does this include upright proselytes? Does it exclude wicked Israelites? The New Testament necessarily suggests to Christians another view of the true sons of Abraham;† but on that it would be improper to insist.

L. 33. 'Afraid to come near him.'—"Ten men, out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you."‡ Christians believe, that love will draw the Gentiles to converted Israel; Jews imagine that fear will drive them to a distance from them. I own, I had rather be loved than dreaded; "perfect love casteth out fear."

Two last lines. P. 97. l. 1. The twenty fourth chapter of Isaiah is generally considered as a prophecy, which more especially relates to Israel, and to all their dispersions and sufferings hitherto; with intimations of mercy to the Gentiles, and to a remnant of Israel;§ and a glorious event to the whole: but the interpretation of it does not concern our main subject. No doubt very great troubles will be experienced by the nations of the earth, at that grand crisis, which will terminate in the glorious millennium; and the conclusion of the chapter certainly predicts that event, however the other parts of it may be explained.

P. 97. l. 2. The two last verses in the thirteenth chapter of Zechariah, most evidently predict the desola-

* Is. lx. † Rom. iv. 11—18. Gal. iii. 7. 29. ‡ Zech. viii. 20.
§ Is. xxiv. 10—16.

tions of Jerusalem by the Romans; the subsequent miseries of the Jews; and the future conversion of Israel.*

L. 4. ‘The breaker, &c.’—There is no doubt concerning the meaning of the word translated “the Breaker,” in Micah.† Let it here also be conceded, (though this is far from certain,) that the conversion and restoration of Israel are predicted; and that “the Breaker” is the Messiah: (Note, P. 97:) yet there is no intimation of his coming at that time; but only of his marching before the Jews, or “at the head of them.” He will, no doubt, at that time break in pieces all obstinate opposers, as “with an iron rod;” but he will also break through all hindrances and impediments: he will break off the chains and bondage of Israel; he will break through the impediment, arising from the pride, impenitence and unbelief of their uncircumcised hearts, the opposition of their carnal prejudices, and reigning sins; their “neck of steel and brow of brass.”‡ He will “break the stout heart, and bind up the broken heart.” He once broke the gates of the grave; he still quickens the dead in sin; and at length, “all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they who have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they who have done evil, to the resurrection of damnation.”§

The term “Breaker,” may therefore mean far more, than ‘crushing the Gentiles.’ All are his “enemies, who will not have him to reign over them:”|| and “his hand shall find out all his enemies, and make them as a fiery oven in the day of his wrath;”¶ But whether all the Gentiles, or the Gentiles exclusively be those enemies, constitutes another and very different question. “The nation and kingdom, that will not serve thee shall

* Zech. xiii. 8, 9.

† Micah ii. 13.

‡ Is. xlvi. 4.

§ John v. 28, 29.

|| Luke xix. 27.

¶ Ps. xxi. 8, 9.

“perish;” but not such nations or individuals, as welcome the salvation of Zion’s King, and join themselves to his people.

L. 10. ‘Who hath believed, &c.’—This is the only place, in which the fifty-third of Isaiah is quoted or referred to: and as some further notice must be taken of it, I shall not examine particularly this application of the question, with which it begins: the New Testament applies it far otherwise.* But it may be asked, in what sense could this be the report of the Gentiles? How could they say, “Who hath believed our report?”

Last line. ‘Pick up every Jew, &c.’—This conduct will scarcely be adopted by the enemies of God and Israel. As far as the prophecies adduced relate to events yet future; the full and clear understanding of them must be waited for till the accomplishment take place. (L. 11—28.) It cannot, however, be supposed, that those Gentiles, who so zealously and laboriously concur, in bringing Israel into their own land, will be involved in the destruction of those, who obstinately oppose them.

P. 98. l. 6. ‘Brethren, &c.’—Probably, it will be found that “the brethren” here spoken of,† will be the converted Gentiles, presented as an oblation to JEHOVAH, by the Jews, “on whose skirt they have laid hold:”‡ for when it is said, “I will also take of them for priests and “Levites;” it does not appear, how Israelites of the other tribes could possibly be meant. None, who are not already Levites, can be taken according to the law as Levites, none as priests, who are not priests of Aaron’s race. But to take of the Gentiles ministers of religion, as the priests and Levites were in Israel, was an event worthy to be dignified by a place in prophecy; and the more so, as it was remote from every thought and expectation of the Jews.

* John xii. 37, 38. Rom. x. 15—17.

† Is. lxvi. 20, 21.

‡ Rom. xv. 16.

P. 98. l. 19. ‘Next to this, &c.’—This accords more nearly with our sentiments, than with the previous statement of the author: and with all the attention of which I am capable, I cannot find out, what his sentiments are concerning ‘all the nations of the earth,’ after the opposition to the restoration of Israel has finally ceased; except that they are to be “servants to Israel:” (L. 25.) but it does not so clearly appear, whether they will be the accepted worshippers of Israel’s God, or not. I shall soon proceed to consider the prophecy in the forty-ninth of Isaiah; and shall here only observe, that Mr. C. has substituted nations for nation: thus shifting off from the nation of Israel, that which is spoken of it, and charging it on the nations of the heathen. The Hebrew is singular. Whether the prophecies concerning the subjection of the nations to Israel, ought to be understood of an outward subjection to the restored Jews, or not, might be questioned: but I have already conceded most freely, that converted Israel will have a precedency in honour and love, above all other people; no subjection will ever be required by Israel, when “the Lord has circumcised his heart;” except that of love; and the superiority will be exercised in meekness, equity, and kindness; and from this none except obstinate enemies will be excepted.

There are several prophecies, which clearly imply a subjection of all nations to one power, or collective body; in many of which the names, Israel, Judah, Jacob, Zion, Jerusalem, are introduced.* But Christian expositors, by no means, consider these prophecies, as predicting the political subjugation of all other people, to the one nation of Israel. Daniel says, “I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him; and there was given to him dominion and

* Is. xlix. 13—26. lx. lxvi. 10—24. Mic. vii. 12—20. Zech. xiv.

“glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him.”—And again, “Until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom.” And again, “And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom, is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.”* In this prophecy nothing is said of Israel as a nation: and “the little horn which made war on the saints,”† we consider as the principal enemy and persecutor of the Christian church. But when the Messiah shall destroy this power, “the kingdoms of the earth shall become his kingdom;” and that of all true believers, whether of Jewish or Gentile extract, being one with him. Thus all nations will become subject to these “saints of the Most High.” Many of us consider this, as the clue to all the other prophecies on this subject, in the Old Testament: and being fully convinced that the New Testament is “the word of God,” we interpret them in connection with the doctrine and the prophecies contained in it. Especially the words of the Apostle, “The promise that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham and his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.”‡ We do not suppose, that Israel as a nation will be excluded: but that, being in the first instance brought to submit to the Messiah in penitent faith and love, they will form a pre-eminent part of this company: that, when God shall restore Israel to their own land, many nations will oppose them violently; as others will struggle hard against the general cause of Christianity: that in both respects terrible vengeance will come on vast multitudes: that the survivors, convinced that “God fighteth for Israel” and his church, will at first, perhaps with terror and reluctance, submit to a power, which they cannot resist: but after some further interpositions of mercy and judgment; all nations will become willing subjects to Christ, and thus the saints as one with him shall possess the kingdom. We do not, however, expect, that so long as the Lord Jesus, and the New Testament, are rejected by the Jews, they will be satisfied with this interpretation: and, as it is not essential to the argument, concerning Jesus being the true Messiah, I shall not further insist on it. If I could conceive that the Messiah was not come; or that when he shall come his kingdom would be an earthly kingdom; I should feel no further interest in the concern. Like other contests about temporal dominion, I should consider it wholly out of my line. The Lord who "doeth all things well," who once gave the kingdoms of the earth to Nebuchadnezzar; and at other times even to still viler lords; will give it to whom he sees good; and if he see good to give it to Israel as a nation, "his will be done."

* Dan. vii. 13, 14. 22. 27. † Dan. vii. 21. ‡ Rom. iv. 11—14.

Even with my present views of the subject, I feel little concern about it. I have no objection to Israel's having any degree of political dominion over other nations, which can be desirable for them, or even practicable. But an universal political empire, over all the four continents and the isles of the sea, exercised by one nation, in a small country in Asia, seems not to accord to many prophecies; and in its own nature is not at all probable, or indeed conceivable.* This, however, which forms so large and prominent a part of Mr. C.'s book, seems to me an object of no consequence, where the great concerns of eternal salvation, or its awful alternative, are under consideration.

Indeed, the grand subject of debate should be brought back, from all conjectures of what shall be, to a simple and accurate consideration of what hath been: for we are far more in danger of erring, in respect of unaccomplished prophecies, than in respect of those events, which have evidently occurred on earth. The fulfilment of the prophecies, concerning the Messiah, and his kingdom, in Jesus Christ, and the success of Christianity, may be clearly made out: but both Jews and Christians have to encounter many difficulties in explaining unfulfilled prophecies; and will, probably all of them, in the event, discover how greatly they were mistaken.

* Is. xlix. 23. lx. 10. 16.

P. 99. l. 15. ‘The life of Israel, &c.’—Does this mean the life of every individual Israelite, or the continuance of Israel’s dominion over the nations? The duration of the church’s prosperity, and of Israel, will be at least a thousand years.

L. 18. ‘Days of the tree of life.’—The words of life are not found in the passage in Isaiah. An oak from its first planting, till its final decay by old age, is supposed, in some instances, to last a thousand years. This seems referred to: but it is not clear what can be meant by “the days of the tree” of life; or what tree of life is intended.*

L. 22. ‘THE UNITY OF GOD ESTABLISHED.’

P. 100. l. 14. ‘Because he is not worshipped, &c.’—It seems then, that the Lord will reign and be worshipped, as the only God, all over the earth: and if so, “all the “Gentiles,” as well as Israel, will thus obey and worship him.

L. 23. ‘Joash king of Judah, was the second, &c.’—There is no scriptural record concerning Joash making himself God.†

L. 27. ‘Hiram, king of Tyrus, &c.’—It is generally supposed, that the name of this king of Tyre, was Itho-

* Gen. ii. 9. iii. 22—24. Prov. iii. 18. xi. 30. xiii. 12. xv. 4. Rev. ii. 7. xxii. 2. 14. † 2 Kings xii. 18—21. 2 Chr. xxiv. 17—25.

balus, or Ethbaal. The name Hiram, does not, however, occur.*

L. 33. ‘Every man, &c.’—Nebuchadnezzar lived some time after his extraordinary madness, died a natural death, and was evidently a humble penitent worshipper of JEHOVAH. It is not indeed said, that Nebuchadnezzar ‘made himself a god;’ though his arrogant language seemed to imply it.† The language ascribed to the king of Babylon by Isaiah was intended chiefly of Belshazzar.‡ It is also meant, that the crucifixion of Jesus was the punishment of his claim; but “he was declared to be the Son of God “with power, by the resurrection from the dead.§” Herod, who put James to death, and, because it pleased the Jews, purposed to kill Peter also, should have been added to the list;|| if not from the New Testament, yet from Josephus.

P. 101. l. 7. ‘If he will still say, &c.’—Balaam is the antecedent: but the writer means, ‘If any one will say, that man is a God,’ ‘tell him he is a liar.’ That is, if a Christian will say this of Jesus, Balaam is directed to ‘call him a liar.’ It is not clear how Mr. C. makes out this meaning from Balaam’s words;¶ but the interpretation is so little plausible, that it may safely be left.

L. 8. ‘They that make them.’—That is, images. Mr. C. in this and the following quotations and reasonings, (P. 101, 102.) endeavours to disprove the deity of Christ, or rather to set his seal to the sentence of the Jewish Sanhedrin; that he deserved to die, because “he, being a “man, made himself God.” But certainly texts proving that images of gold and silver, wood or stone, are not god, must be wholly irrelevant to the argument; as well,

* Ez. xxviii. 1—19.

† Dan. iii. 15. iv. 30. v. 19, 20.

‡ Is. xiv. 12—14.

§ Rom. i. 4.

|| Acts xii. 1—4. 21—24

¶ Numb. xxiii. 19.

 Johu x. 33.

as all declarations, that man is not God, or that unity is not Trinity. (P. 103. l. 25—29.)—After all the laboured, acute, and learned efforts of Socinians, and other nominal Christians, against the doctrine of the TRINITY; the loose and general objections against it, thrown together in this place, are not greatly to be dreaded. A large proportion of learned Trinitarians give up, as an interpolation, the text quoted from John;* yet whether authentick or not, it must be allowed to be a clear and concise statement of our doctrine. “The Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one:” (Οὗτοι οἱ τρεῖς ἐν εἰσι.) These three persons (masc.) “are one,” (neuter) θεῖον, numen. We allow that the clearest and fullest revelation of this mystery is contained in the New Testament. There it is so full and undeniable, that Antitrinitarians have evidently no resource left them: but to pronounce very many of the passages in proof of it, either interpolations, or corrupt readings, or the erroneous conclusions of the writer, as a fallible man and a feeble reasoner. If this procedure, which reduces the word of God to the level with other ancient, venerable, and authentick books, claiming no divine inspiration, be not needful to their tottering cause, why do they so constantly have recourse to it? But indeed, even the Jews may teach them, that it is the doctrine of the New Testament; as one of their strongest objections to this sacred book is taken from that doctrine, being so undeniably contained in it.—Fas est et ab hoste doceri. Let the point once be established, that Jesus is the Messiah, predicted in the Old Testament; and the proof that the doctrine of the Trinity is taught by him, and his apostles, will not be a matter of great difficulty. On the question, ‘Was the Messiah to be a mere man like other men?’ some things have been adduced from the

* 1 John v. 7, 8.

Old Testament, as to his Deity, which, I am confident, cannot easily be answered. (On P. 5—7.) In addition to these, it may here be observed, on the general doctrine: that the name of God in Hebrew being plural, and yet almost always, in this sense of it, used with singular verbs and pronouns; is at least a remarkable circumstance, in the phraseology of that book, which especially makes known to “mankind the one living and true God,” as distinguished from all false gods. The language used in the creation of Adam, “Let us make man, in our image, after our likeness: so God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him.”* The circumstance also, that in the Hebrew, the word, rendered CREATOR, is plural, Remember thy Creators, (Marg;†) with many things of this kind, are such as Antitrinitarians, Jews or Christians, would not have previously expected, and which, however light they may affect to make of them, they would much rather had not been found in Scripture.

The following passage from the law, is worthy of notice in this argument: “On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel, saying unto them, JEHOVAH bless thee and keep thee; JEHOVAH make his face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee; JEHOVAH lift up his countenance upon thee and give thee peace; and they shall put my NAME upon the children of Israel, and I will bless them.” This threefold repetition of the name, JEHOVAH, has generally been considered as implying some mystery: yet who, except him that believes a Trinity of persons in the unity of the Godhead, can shew what that mystery is? and what Christian can help recollecting the form of Christian baptism, “In the NAME (one NAME), of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost?” Or the Christian benediction, “The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of

* Gen. i. 26, 27.

† Ec. xii. 1.

“ God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you
“ all. Amen ?”*

Some explication of those texts, which speak expressly of the Messiah as God;† yea, some peculiarly satisfactory explication ought in all reason to be given; before the doctrine should be treated with decided irreverence.

What shall we say to the command, “ Kiss the Son, lest he be angry,” “ Blessed are all they who trust in him ?”‡ Are not both these, ascribing divine honour and worship to him?§ “ Cursed is he that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm.—Blessed is the man that trusteth in the LORD, and whose hope the LORD is.”

How then can he be blessed, “ who trusteth in the Messiah,” if the Messiah be only ‘ man like other men ?’ And, if the Messiah be not meant; What man, or angel, or creature, can be substituted in his place, to whom JEHOVAH would say, “ Kiss the Son, lest he be angry and ye perish from the way; if his wrath be kindled, yea, but a little; blessed are all they that put their trust in him ?”||

The language of many Scriptures, which are little regarded in the argument, require somewhat more notice.

Thus we read in Isaiah: “ Hearken unto me, O Jacob and Israel, my called, I am he. I am the First, I also am the Last.¶ My hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand hath spanned the heavens: when I call, they stand up together. All ye, assemble yourselves, and hear; which among them hath declared these things? The LORD hath loved him; he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be

* Numb. vi. 23—27. Matt. xxviii. 19. 2 Cor. xiii. 14. † Ps. xlv. 6. Jer. xvii. 5, 6. Is. vii. 14. ix. 6, 7. Mic. iv. 2. Zech. xiii. 10.

‡ Ps. ii. 12.

§ Ps. cxvii. 3, 4.

|| Is. xi. 10. xii. 2. Matt. xii. 21. Rom. xv. 12. Eph. i. 12, 13.

¶ Isa. xli. 4, xlv. 6. Rev. i. 11. 17. ii. 8. xxii. 13.

“on the Chaldeans. I, even I, have spoken; yea, I have called him; I have brought him, and he shall make his way prosperous. Come ye near unto me, hear ye this. I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; from the time that it was, there am I, and now the LORD God, and his Spirit hath sent me.”* Who is the Speaker in this passage? There is not the least intimation of any change in the Person speaking the former and the latter part of the quotation; in which the peculiar style of Deity, and the name JEHOVAH are used. Even in the latter part, he speaks decidedly the language of Deity; yet he says, “Adonai JEHOVAH and his Spirit hath sent me.” Or, “hath sent me, and his Spirit.” For this is the more obvious rendering of the clause.

Is there then in this passage nothing favouring the doctrine of the Messiah’s Deity, or that of the Trinity? In like manner, by another prophet; “Thus saith the LORD of hosts, after the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you: for he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye. For, behold, I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants; and ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me. Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion; for lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the LORD: and many nations shall be joined to the LORD in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know, that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto thee.”† I must intreat the reader to examine carefully the language of this prophecy. I have marked some clauses, in Italicks, as requiring peculiar notice. But it is manifest, that the Speaker repeatedly calls himself JEHOVAH; and uses expressions peculiar to

* Is. xlviii. 12—16.

† Zech. ii 8—11. See also Zech. iii. 1, 2. vi. 12—14. xii. 10.

God; and yet he says again and again, “the LORD of “hosts hath sent me.” I scarcely know any passage in the New Testament more decided in this respect; and it must lead him, who is intimately conversant with the scripture, to recollect the several texts, in which it is said, “God dwelleth in you;” “Christ dwelleth in you;”
“Ye are the temple of God, and the Spirit of God “dwelleth in you.”* Especially the words of our Lord, must occur to him, “The Spirit of truth dwelleth with “you, and shall be in you.” “If a man love me he “will keep my words, and my Father will love him; and “we will come to him, and make our abode with him.”†

Again, we read in Malachi; “The Lord whom ye seek, “shall suddenly come to his temple, even the Messenger of “the covenant whom ye delight in; behold he shall come, “saith the LORD of hosts.”‡ Here again, I ask; who is this Lord, that shall come to his temple? Surely the temple was not consecrated to man, or angel, or any other except JEHOVAH. Had modern Antitrinitarians dictated the scriptures, we should no more have met with this phraseology, in the Old Testament; than in the New, with the passage of John supposed to be interpolated; or another, which is not said to be so: “We know, that the Son “of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, “that we may know him that is true; and we are in “him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This “(Oυτος) is the true God, and eternal life. Little children “keep yourselves from idols.”§ I say again, all Antitrinitarians had much rather these passages were not found in scripture; and would be glad to alter or expunge them.

The traditions, of almost every nation, contain something analogous to plurality in unity, however distorted, in re-

* 1 Cor. iii. 16.

† John xiv. 16—23.

‡ Mal. iii. 1, 2.

§ 1 John v. 20, 21.

spect of the Deity: and many passages have, by learned men, been adduced even from the Targums and Talmuds of the Jews, which concur in this opinion. I do not adduce these things as proofs: but to induce Jews, as well as others, to use more caution and reverence of God, in speaking on this sublime, mysterious, and awful subject; and in order to shew that Christians did not invent the doctrine of the Trinity. “Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty to perfection!” We cannot comprehend ourselves, or how “body, soul, and spirit,” form one individual man: how then are we competent to decide, as ex cathedra, concerning the infinite God?

P. 101. l. 27. ‘What does Paul mean by this sentence, &c.?’*—‘He saith not that the FATHER, mentioned in the twenty-fourth verse, but that “GOD may be all in all;” and so he seems to lead us to that interpretation of the Godhead, which comprehends Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; that the Godhead may govern all things by himself, without the intervention of a mediator to exact our obedience in his name, and to convey to us favours and rewards. So as now Christ, God-man, is “all in all,” (Col. iii. 11:) because the Father hath put all things into his hand, does all things, and governs all things by him; when this economy ceases, the Godhead will be “all in all.”’ (Whitby.)

‘The distinction between the absolute, universal, and everlasting kingdom of God, the Governor of all; and the mediatorial kingdom of Christ, as instituted for the benefit of fallen man, which was intended to endure for a time, in order to accomplish certain important ends, to the glory of God in man’s salvation; will, after the day of judgment, be terminated. Christ, having executed his commission, will cease to reign over all worlds, as Me-

* 1 Cor. xv. 28.

‘diator, having publicly delivered up the kingdom to ‘God in the person of the Father: yet he will, in hu‘man nature, retain a peculiar authority over his re‘deemed people; and, as one with the Father, he will,
 ‘with him and the Holy Spirit, reign one “God over all ‘blessed for evermore.” Nor will he any more cease to ‘reign in this sense, when he hath given up the mediato‘rial kingdom, than the Father ceased to reign, when he ‘appointed the Son to that kingdom.’ (Family Bible.)

P. 102. l. 3—7. ‘The last verse, &c.’—As God was pleased that his servant Moses should place the verse in question last, it seems not very reverential to say, ‘Why
 ‘is not this verse first in the song, as indeed it ought to be?’ I think few persons will be satisfied with the reason assigned for the transposition; however assured he may be ‘that the kingdoms of the earth” shall, in the last days, become the kingdoms of God and his Messiah.

L. 17. “My Father is greater than I.”—‘As Mediator, I ‘receive my commission from the Father: and as I am his ‘Ambassador; he is my Principal, and as such my superior.’ An ambassador is equal in nature to his prince. “Neither
 “the Son, but the Father.” (L. 24. 25.) The Son, as Mediator, does not know that day; it being no part of that “revelation which was given” him to make known to his church.—Let the reader compare this part, which consists of quotations from the New Testament, with the language of angels concerning the “Lamb that was slain,” in the Revelation of St. John.*

P. 103. l. 2. ‘The difference is uncommonly great, &c.’—The Pharisees ascribed the miracles of Jesus to the power of Satan: thus they “blasphemed the Son of man,” during the season of his humiliation. They also condemned him to death, as a blasphemer, for making “himself God.”

* Rev. v. 12—14.

But he arose from the dead: "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore, being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear."*

Thus he was "justified by the Spirit:" and they who rejected this last demonstration of his being the divine Messiah, would never be forgiven: not because the Holy Ghost is greater than the Son; but because the guilt of those who blasphemed this grand proof that Jesus was the Messiah, was more heinous than the guilt of those, who blasphemed him, when living as Man on earth. If a Jew will attempt to prove his doctrine from the New Testament; he must so far be answered from the New Testament, and according to it. Indeed Jesus may be said to be greater than the Holy Spirit, in the very same way, in which the Father is greater than the Son: not in nature and perfections; but as sent by him, and glorifying him, as the ambassador does his principal. All other inferiority Trinitarians deny.

If Jesus be Immanuel, he is both God and Man: whatever is said of him as Man, must be understood of his human nature: whatever of him, as God, of his divine nature. Suppose, for a moment, the doctrine to be true; we ask, how could it be possible to speak of him in other language, than that which he uses concerning himself, and which the writers of the New Testament use concerning him? Before any objection can be made to bear against this language; the doctrine must either be proved false, or, by a petitio principii, be assumed to be false.

‘Secondly, Christ says, Not, &c.’—(L. 5—12.) In condescension to Jewish prejudices, and those of Jewish converts to Christianity, some particulars of the Mosaick law were recommended to the observation even of the Gentile converts; but the Apostles evidently considered that law as, in itself, abolished. On the other hand, our Lord by no means intended, that his disciples during his life should, in any instance, disobey the written ceremonial law. He himself perfectly observed it, and taught them to do the same.* The oral law, “the traditions of the elders,” he indeed protested against, as making void the written law of God. These hints suffice to shew, that there was no discordance between our Lord’s doctrine, and that of the apostles, as speaking by the Holy Spirit.

* Acts ii. 32, 33.

That the words and works of Christ, and those of the Holy Spirit, were, according to the New Testament, in many respects one and the same, might easily be shewn: let the reader carefully compare the texts referred to in the margin, and he must be convinced of this.†

P. 103. l. 17. ‘A man, &c.’—That Jesus was “a Man approved of God,” no Christian denies: but how does this prove that he was no more than a Man? Even by assuming, before all proof, that the doctrine in debate is false and impossible, and in no other way. But is this sound logic?

L. 28. 29. ‘To take the glory, &c.’—If we give the glory due to God to mortal man, or to any creature, we are guilty of idolatry. But, except by assuming without proof that our doctrine is false, this does not evince that our worship of Jesus Christ is idolatry: for we believe him to be One with the Father and the Holy Spirit, “God over all, blessed for evermore.” He requires, and we believe that he had a full right to require, that “all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father: He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the

* Matt. xxiii. 2, 3. † Matt. x. 20. Mark xiii. 11. Luke xii. 12. xxi. 15. Rev. ii. 1. 7, 9. 11, 12. 17, 18. 29. iii. 1. 6, 7. 13, 14. 22.

“Father who hath sent him.”* And we must have far stronger arguments, than those here adduced, to convince us, that we are mistaken in this grand concern.

But if indeed the great and glorious God do subsist in three persons, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; if he have revealed this, as plainly as words can convey the mysterious truth; and if men, “leaning to their own understanding,” treat this revelation as a LIE, (“He that believeth not, hath made God a liar,”) is there, I say, no danger on the other side? Is it not possible, that the Supreme Being of Antitrinitarians, whether Jews, Christians, or Mohammedans, may be no more the true God, than Baal or Jupiter was? Not only the mysteries of his nature, but the perfection of his justice and holiness, are (to say no more) grievously veiled and clouded, by all Antitrinitarians. “The HOLY ONE of Israel ceases from before us.” “A JUST GOD AND A SAVIOUR” is not recognised. Mercy, without an atonement of infinite value, dishonours the law and justice of God; and many of us are greatly alarmed in respect of Antitrinitarians, lest they should be found worshippers of an ideal Supreme Being, an ens rationis: though not “the work of their own hands,” yet the creation of their imagination; and no more the God of Abraham, “the Holy One of Israel,” “the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,” than the supreme deity of the Chinese or Hindoos. An impartial man must allow, that there is danger on both sides: and none, except him who takes it for granted, that his own doctrine is true, and his opponent’s false, will contend that all the danger lies on one side.†

Some at least of the Jews consider Christianity, as ‘materializing or corporalizing the divine essence:’ but this

* John v. 23. † See Matt. xi. 27. John v. 23. 1 John ii. 23. v. 21, 22.

originates wholly from misapprehension. It cannot be denied that there have been Christians, so called, who at least give occasion for such a charge; and indeed there still are; but Christianity itself is not answerable for any sentiment, which is not authorized by the New Testament. And in this sacred book, where especially the doctrine of the Trinity is most fully revealed; the idea of 'materializing or corporalizing, 'the divine essence,' is wholly excluded. "No man hath seen God at any time." "The King eternal, immortal, 'invisible," "whom no man hath seen, or can see."* The doctrine of "God manifest in the flesh," doth not suppose that the divine essence is corporalized; but, that it manifests itself to man, in and through the human nature of Jesus Christ, who is "the image of the invisible God," and "in whom it pleased all fulness to dwell," even "all the fulness of the Godhead bodily:"† for "the Word became (εγενετο) flesh, and tabernacled among us;" (εσκηνωσεν;) as the glory of JEHOVAH, did in the tabernacle in the wilderness, or in Solomon's temple. Therefore Jesus said, "Destroy this temple:"—"but he spake of the temple of his body," or human nature.‡ The divine perfections are displayed in the person, and by the words and works of Christ, who, as God, is "One with the Father;" and his divine nature is manifested in and through his human nature, being mysteriously united to it. Thus, 'as the reasonable soul and flesh is one man, so God and Man is one Christ.' But this materializes, or corporalizes, neither the reasonable soul, nor the divine Essence. 'One, not by the conversion of the Godhead into flesh, but by taking the Manhood into God.'§ Perhaps no Protestant creed enters so minutely into particulars, or approaches so near the vain attempt of rendering the incomprehensible mystery of the Trinity

* John i. 18. 1 Tim. i. 17. vi. 16.
Heb. i. 3. ‡ John i. 14. ii. 19—21.

† Col. i. 15. 19. ii. 9.
§ Athan. Creed.

comprehensible, as the Athanasian Creed does: yet it most decidedly protests against the idea of corporalizing the essence of the Deity. “The form of God,”* which some object to, has nothing to do with materialism. “A spirit “stood before me,—I could not discern the form thereof,” says Eliphaz in Job.† “The form of the fourth is as the “Son of God,” says Nebuchadnezzar of the angel who appeared with the three young Jews, in the fiery furnace.‡ “The similitude of JEHOVAH shall he behold.”§ This similitude of JEHOVAH, we believe to be “the form of God,” in which the only begotten Son of God manifested himself, to the patriarchs, to Moses, and to others. “No man hath “seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, who is in “the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.”|| Forma animi æterna, (‘the form of the mind is eternal,’) says Tacitus, who, as neither Jew nor Christian, may be supposed impartial: but had he any idea of materializing or corporalizing the human soul? It might easily be shewn, that there are expressions and narrations in the Old Testament, more suited to convey this idea, than any in the New:¶ but I reverence the Word of God in both Testaments, and am confident that, properly interpreted, the whole sacred volume is calculated to exclude all such gross ideas of the divine Essence, and deeply to impress the contrary:—“God is a “Spirit, and they who worship him, must worship in spirit “and in truth.”

P. 103. l. 30—36. P. 104. l. 1—6.—I do not object to the conclusion which Mr. C. deduces from the text in Deuteronomy:—“I will cause them to die, that shall say “there is another God:” and it would be a relief to hear him speak so seriously about “the second death” (P. 104.

* Phil. ii. 6. † Job. iv. 15, 16. ‡ Dan. iii. 25. § Num. xii. 8.

|| John i. 18.

¶ Gen. iii. 8. xxxii. 24—29. Ex. xxiv. 10.

Hos. xii. 3—5,

 John iv. 24.

l. 6.) and ‘the day of judgment,’ were it not counter-balanced by other considerations. As, however, the clause, “the second death,” is taken from the New Testament; the several passages where it occurs, are seriously recommended to his attention.* Christians, at least Protestant Christians, hold as strongly as the Jews, that it is a damnable sin, to give divine honour to any creature, to any except God: but they believe, that the One living and true God incomprehensibly exists, as three Persons, “The Father, the Son, “and the Holy Ghost;” into whose One name, we are baptized. Divine perfections are ascribed to each separately, divine operations are stated to be performed by each, and divine honours are rendered to each: yet there is only “One “living and true God.” This we think revealed in the whole scripture, but most clearly in the New Testament.

But though I do not object to Mr. C.’s conclusion from the passage adduced, I must strongly object to his new version of it, which is only a translation of a part of the verse, and not at all consistent with the other part of it.—“For I, I, HE, and there is no God besides me: I cause “to die, and I cause to live; I wound and I heal, and not “from my hand a Deliverer.”—This, I think, is strictly a literal translation. There is no affix pronoun to the verb, “I cause to die,” which there should be, to give even the former clause the meaning Mr. C. puts upon it; and the latter part is wholly incompatible with it. Had a Christian taken such a liberty with the scripture, and in the same manner, I should have marked it with more indignant disapprobation.

P. 104. l. 7. ‘O how wonderful, &c.’—It is indeed wonderful, that such an immense majority of Christians, during almost 1800 years, including the most sagacious; the most learned; the most holy, pious, and useful men, whom the world ever saw, should have maintained the doctrine of the Trinity; and have formed both their creeds, and liturgies, and their whole worship; with all their hopes of eternal salvation, and all their motives for self-denying labours and patient sufferings, from this doctrine, if it be not the doctrine of revelation! And that they should have been so deeply convinced, in the midst of persecutions, and at the approach of violent, or natural, death, that it was the “sure testimony of God.” It is also most wonderful, that at the reformation from Popery, when every part of Christianity, as corrupted by Papists and others, was examined and re-examined, with the most acute, patient, and diligent investigation, by men of no ordinary talents and learning, many of whom sealed their testimony in the flames, and others lived in constant expectation of the same martyrdom; when numberless ancient, and in that view venerable, notions and practices were abolished, as antichristian; that they, I say, at this crisis, should, without one exception, as to a collective body, retain the doctrine of the Trinity in their creeds, articles, and liturgies. This is indeed wonderful, if it be not the doctrine of scripture. That they should also persist in recommending this faith, with their dying lips, to their surviving friends: that this should, especially, have been the case with those, who spent their lives in studying the scriptures! That all the labours of able, zealous, and learned Socinians, as well as the sneers and sarcasms of avowed infidels, should have effected so very little comparatively, in opposition to it, and that little by no means permanent: and that, in every age, the men, who have most zealously aimed to effect the conversion of idolaters, in every part of the globe, to the worship of the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and of the wicked from the errors of their ways, should have held, as ESSENTIAL to Christianity, the doctrine of the Trinity: these things are indeed wonderful, most wonderful, absolutely unaccountable: and if they were not capable of such proof, as excludes doubt, they would be perfectly incredible. If this be not the doctrine of the prophets, and of the apostles of Jesus Christ! this fact is indeed more wonderful, than any of the miracles recorded in scripture; or any other well attested fact in universal history.

* Rev. ii. 11. xx. 14, 15. xxi. 8.

If the writer may be permitted to speak of himself, after such a venerable company, he would say; that before he had, with any proportionable degree of seriousness and diligence, studied the scriptures, he was a Socinian; and could have retailed all the ordinary objections to the doctrine of the Trinity, and the other doctrines which depend on it, with sufficient plausibility and confidence, and with an assumed air of superior discernment. But, by searching the scriptures with great assiduity, and by prayer for that wisdom, which God has promised to those, who seek wisdom from him, as one in most deep concern about the salvation of his own soul; with little aid from Trinitarian writers, and none from preachers; after much opposition of heart to the doctrine, he became, in about two years, a decided Trinitarian. This has been stated in “The Force of Truth,” which has now been published more than thirty-six years. All these years have been employed, almost exclusively, in searching and explaining the scriptures, from the pulpit and the press: and at this day, his assurance, that the doctrine of the Trinity, is the clear testimony of God in his holy oracles, is even stronger than ever. He, indeed, finds no capacity of doubting the doctrine, except on the supposition, that the scriptures are not the word of God.

P. 104. l. 9. ‘A father is above the son, &c.’—Not in nature certainly; but merely as the senior and superior relation, the same nature being common to both.

Last line. ‘The Gentiles to know that his name is not ‘threc, but ONE.’—Every zealot for a sect, or sentiment, is ready to say, ‘Ere long all will be of my opinion:’ but, I do not read in the prophets, that ‘God will cause the ‘Gentiles to know, that his name is not three but ONE.’ Christians, however, have no objection to the position: “Baptize them in the name” (not names,) “of the Father, “and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.” Certainly three names do not imply three persons. Marcus Tullius Cicero, Caius Julius Cæsar; each three names of the same man: but we have no objection to three persons. Our doctrine is, Three persons and one God.

Here Mr. C. closes: but before I close, I must take some notice of his OMISSIONS. He has never, as it has before been shewn, brought forward the question, Whether it was predicted, that the Messiah, should be a Priest, or not? He has not stated, Whether the predicted Messiah should die, or not; probably he thinks that he will not. But supposing him to die, Whether he would die a natural or a violent death; if a violent death, in what manner, and by whom, and what the event would be; whether as a Sacrifice for sin, or not. Mr. C. must know, that Christians lay very great stress on each of these particulars; and they consider certain parts of the Old Testament, as most explicitly, and undeniably, predicting them, even to minuteness; in short, that all the prophets “testified beforehand the sufferings of “Christ, and the glory which should follow.”

It has indeed been publicly asserted, and it remains, I believe, uncontradicted, that the Jews are forbidden by their Rabbies to read the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. If this be not true, it should be publicly contradicted.

Whatever were the motives of these, and other similar omissions, by Mr. C.; I must not conclude my answer without bringing forward, in a compendious manner, the substance of the prophecies of the Old Testament, on the following points.

1. Concerning the reception, with which the Messiah would meet from the nation of Israel.

2. Concerning his violent death, and that kind of death by which he would be cut off, with the special end and design of his crucifixion. And,

3. Concerning his resurrection, and subsequent glory; and the kingdom, which he as risen and ascended would establish, preserve, and extend, through the whole earth; to endure till the end of the world.

1. Concerning the reception, with which the Messiah would meet from the nation of Israel.

Thus we read in Isaiah: "Listen, O isles unto me, and hearken, ye people from far: The LORD hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name. And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me; and said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified." It is plain, that the Messiah is intended in this prophecy; for the particulars specified in it never met, or can meet, in any other person: and he may be called ISRAEL, in the same way as he is called "the seed of Abraham," being the "GLORY of his people Israel;" the Head of that body, which with the Head, is "the Israel of God;" and as having, like Jacob, when he received the name of Israel, wrestled with God, and prevailed for the blessing.* But an individual, and not the nation, must be intended; or the whole which follows in the context will be destitute of meaning.—“Then I said, I have laboured “in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, and in “vain; yet surely my judgment is with the LORD, and my “work with my God. And now, saith the LORD that “formed thee from the womb to be his Servant, to bring “Jacob again to him; Though Israel be not gathered, yet “shall I be glorious in the eyes of the LORD, and my God “shall be my strength. And he said, It is a light thing,

 “that thou shouldest be my servant, to raise up the tribes
 “of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will “also give thee for a Light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest “be my salvation unto the end of the earth.” The Messiah here complains of having “laboured in vain,” evidently among his countrymen; and supposes, that “Israel would “not be gathered;” that is, as a nation, at the first, or for a long time, but only a remnant of them; called “the “preserved of Israel.” In order to compensate this, and as something far beyond the “gathering of Israel;” JEHOVAH promises, that he, the Messiah, “shall be the Light of the “Gentiles, and his salvation to the end of the earth.”—
 It then follows, “Thus saith the LORD, the Redeemer of “Israel and his Holy One, to him whom man despiseth, to “him whom the nation abhorreth,” (עַד singular, not עַדִּים plural,) “to a Servant of rulers, kings shall see and arise, “princes also shall worship, because of the LORD that is “faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose “thee.”† Surely this prophecy leads us to expect, that when the true Messiah should appear, the nation of Israel, and the rulers of that nation, would reject, despise, and hate him; as they had generally done the prophets who went before him.
 Again, in the same prophet, “Behold, my Servant shall

* Comp. Hos. xii. 3, 4. Heb. v. 7.

† Is. xlix. 1—7.

“deal prudently, he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high. As many were astonished at thee; his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men. So shall he sprinkle many nations: the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which hath not been told them shall they see, and that which they have not heard shall they consider.”* ‘This is the King Messiah, who shall be exalted above Abraham, and extolled above Moses, and be high above the angels of the ministry.’ (Misrach Tenctuma, an ancient Jewish writing) Indeed, none but the Messiah can be meant. The same prophecy is evidently continued in the next chapter: “Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the LORD revealed? for he” (the Servant before mentioned,) “shall grow up before him,” (JEHOVAH,) “as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him. He is despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid, as it were, our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not.”† The very person, who “should be exalted, and extolled, and be very high,” would be “despised and rejected by men,” nay, by Israelites! Does not this prophecy, when carefully considered, tend to prepare the mind for the history of Jesus, contained in the four evangelists? and for the Acts of the Apostles? If the Messiah were not meant, let it be shewn in whom the prophecy has been, or ever can be, fulfilled. The rest of the chapter will come under our consideration in another part of this enquiry. In a Psalm, which will shortly be more fully shewn to be a prediction of the Messiah, he is introduced as saying; “I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people. All

* Is. lii. 13—15.

† Is. liii. 1—3.

“that see me laugh me to scorn; they shoot out the lip, “they shake the head, saying; “He trusted on the LORD, “that he would deliver him: let him deliver him, seeing he “delighted in him.”* The subsequent parts of the Psalm could not be spoken by David, or by any other man, in those days, concerning himself: and nothing in the preceding part of the Psalm, had been spoken of the Gentiles: so that the reception of the Messiah by Israel is most undeniably predicted; “the sufferings of the Messiah and the “glory which followed.” Several other Psalms relate to the same subject; but do not so obviously, and expressly state it. †

Thus again, Isaiah; “Sanctify the LORD of hosts himself; “and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. And “he shall be for a Sanctuary: but for a Stone of stumbling, “and for a Rock of offence, to both the houses of Israel; “for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem: “and many of them shall stumble, and fall, and be broken, “and be snared, and be taken.” § Who is here spoken of, except Immanuel, just before mentioned? || Or, when did Israel so stumble, and fall, in respect of “JEHOVAH of “hosts;” as in the rejection of Immanuel?

However the prophecy be interpreted, it stands indelibly on the face of it, that what should have been a Sanctuary, would prove “a Stone of stumbling, and a Rock of offence, “to both the houses of Israel, and to the inhabitants of “Jerusalem.” If Jesus was the promised Messiah, the fulfilment is known to all men: otherwise, what events are predicted?

“The same Stone, which the builders rejected, is become “the Head-stone of the corner; this is the LORD’s doing: “it is marvellous in our eyes.” ¶ I do not refer to the New

* Ps. xxii. 5—8.

† Ps. xxii. 12—18.

‡ Ps. ii. 1—5. lxix.

§ Is. viii. 13—15.

|| Is. viii. 8.

¶ Ps. cxviii. 22, 23.

Testament, as authority to Jews; but can they answer, as an argument, the application of this text by our Lord and his apostles?* What other so evident a fulfilment of it has ever taken place?—Again, one speaks, by Zechariah; “Three shepherds also I cut off in one month; and my soul loathed them, and their soul also abhorred me.” —“And I said unto them, If ye think good, give me my price, and if not, forbear: so they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver: and the LORD said unto me, Cast it to the potter; a goodly price that I was prized at by them.”† If the Messiah be not here spoken of; what events are narrated or predicted? If he be; then he, even JEHOVAH, would be despised and abhorred by the shepherds of Israel; in the manner recorded by the Evangelists. Enough has been said to shew, that it might previously have been expected, that the Messiah would be received with contempt and aversion, by a large proportion of the people, to whom it was sent, and especially by their rulers and teachers: but our next enquiry,

2. Concerning the death, by which, according to the prophets, the Messiah would be cut off; will bring before us much more proof of this particular also.

Even the first promise of a Redeemer implied the idea, that he would be a sufferer; “I will put enmity between thee and the woman; and between thy seed and her Seed; it shall bruise thy head; and thou shalt bruise his heel.”‡ “The sufferings of Christ, and the glory which followed,” in the triumphs of Christianity over idolatry and wickedness, or the cause of Satan, constitute the best, and the only satisfactory, comment on this original promise of a Messiah: yet the more complete fulfilment of the last clause is still future; as the crucifixion of Christ, and the persecutions of his people, by those very persons, to whom he said, "Ye are of your father the devil; and the lusts of your father ye will do: he was a murderer from the beginning:"* this, I say, forms the clearest exposition of the other clause; "Thou shalt bruise his heel."

* Matt. xxi. 42. Acts iv. 10, 11.

† Zech. xi. 8—13. Matt. xxvii. 3—10.

‡ Gen. iii. 15.

But it would far exceed my limits, to adduce, and comment on, all the prophecies, respecting this subject, in the Old Testament; "The Son of man must suffer these things, and be rejected of the chief priests, and scribes, and be slain, and be raised up the third day." "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?"†

The portion of scripture, part of which was before considered, must now be proceeded with. When any man attentively reads the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah; the question almost irresistibly forces itself upon him: "Of whom speaketh the prophet this? Of himself? or of some other man?"‡ I do not know, that the prophet was ever supposed to have spoken of himself: so it is needless to dwell on the absurdity of such a supposition. Nor does it appear, that any individual has been pointed out, in whom the prophecy was, or will be, fulfilled.

Extracts are given by Dr. Whitby, on the eighth of Acts, from ancient Jewish writers, maintaining, that the prophecy relates to the Messiah: but modern Jews do not admit this, and cannot be supposed to do it. We only request to know, of whom, or, what company, or, what transactions, it is either a prediction, or a history? As a part of "the oracles of God committed to them," and owned by them to be 'the word of God;' it must have some important meaning, and we would gladly be informed, what they suppose that meaning to be? When this is fairly and clearly stated, I trust learned Christians will give it a candid and impartial consideration. But we do not live in an age, in which silence and imposed restraints on such a subject, will produce any other effect, than a conclusion, in the minds of men in general, that the Jews are conscious of being totally unable to disprove the Christian interpretation of the prophecy; though determined not to accede to it.

* John viii. 44. † Luke ix. 22. xxiv. 25—27. 44—47. ‡ Acts viii. 34.

Some writers, as I recollect, have, in a general and indefinite way, asserted, that the nation of Israel was intended; and not any individual: but it is almost self-evident, that this interpretation cannot be maintained, or even rendered plausible, by any genius or learning of man. Let us, however, proceed to examine some parts of it.—“Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet did we esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. All we, like sheep, have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid” (or, caused to meet) “upon him the iniquities of us all.”* It is undeniable, that, in these verses, the writer speaks of many sinning, and exposed to suffering: and of One as suffering for their sins; and that by his suffering the punishment which they had deserved, they are delivered and healed. Now if the nation of Israel be the sufferer, considered as one person; who are they, for whose transgressions Israel was wounded and bruised? Such language can never mean, that Israel suffered for his own sins: nor, that one generation of Israel suffered for the sins of other generations: because their sufferings could not be “the chastisement of their peace,” or avail for “the healing of former generations.”—And what generation of Israel ever suffered for the sins of their fathers; being themselves innocent and deserving no sufferings? Neither will it be allowed by the Jews themselves, that Israel suffered for the sins, and in order to the salvation, of the Gentiles, or any part of them. In short, it does not appear, that any meaning, even specious meaning, can be given to the passage: except by supposing Israel, or some other collective body, confessing their guilt, and speaking of some individual, who suffered the punishment due to them, in order that they might be pardoned and saved. Supposing the prophet, for argument's sake, (I do not adduce it as authority;) to mean the company, of whom St. John speaks in Revelation, who say to "the Lamb that had been slain," "Thou hast redeemed us to God with thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation:" suppose the prophet, I say, to mean this company, and himself as one of it, when he says, "All we, like sheep, have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and JEHOVAH has made to meet on him the iniquities of us all:" Can any other interpretation be adduced, which will bear a competition with this? In Isaiah is a lock, the wards of which are so intricate, that no key could be found to open it: till at length one is brought from the apostle John, which with perfect ease opens it, at the first touch. Was not this the key originally intended for that lock?

* Is. liii. 4—6.

"He was oppressed, and he was afflicted;" (more exactly, "It was exacted, and he became answerable.") "He was led as a Lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living." Here the person, who was "bruised for the iniquities" of the company spoken of, of whom their "debt was exacted and he became answerable," is represented as suffering in meekness, patience, and silence, and not murmuring or complaining; though hurried to execution without judgment, and without any one to appear in his behalf; and not only to suffer grievously in other respects, but, as “cut off from the land of the living,” “for the transgression of my people was he stricken.” If the Messiah be intended, it is manifest, that he was not only to be a sufferer, a meek, harmless and patient sufferer, under oppression and iniquity; but to die also, and by a violent death, as paying a debt, which he did not contract; as “stricken for the transgression,” of that people, whom the prophet or God owns as his people. Who can help, in this connection, recollecting the language of Gabriel to Daniel; “Messiah the Prince shall be cut off, but not for himself?”* Different methods have been adopted, of evading our conclusion from Daniel’s prophecy; but what method can be taken of escaping the same conclusion from Isaiah? Inadmissible, as Mr. C.’s interpretation of Daniel has been shown to be; he probably cannot adduce any thing, even so plausible as that is, in respect of Isaiah’s words.

“And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth. Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise him; he hath put him to grief.” Here the innocence of the sufferer also is attested; yet, notwithstanding this, “it PLEASED JEHOVAH to bruise him.” He suffered unto death, and was buried. Dying as a malefactor, “he made his grave with the wicked.” “A grave was appointed for him among the wicked; but with a rich man in his death.” Every one knows the christian interpretation: viz. Jesus, being interred in the sepulchre of Joseph, instead of being buried with the malefactors, in the grave appointed for them. And is not this singular coincidence of the event, with the obscure words of the prophet, a proof that this was intended by the Spirit of prophecy? Or what other interpretation has any man to propose, which can stand the competition with it?

* Is. liii. Dan. ix. 25, 26.

‘That his grave should be “appointed with the wicked,” (which was the case of those who suffered as criminals,) but that “he should be with the rich in his death,” are circumstances, which before they happened, were very improbable should ever concur in the same person.’ Campbell. Edinburgh.

But how was it, that it should “please the LORD to bruise him, &c.?” What follows answers the question. “When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in his hand.” Nothing can be plainer, than that the person here spoken of, when “cut off from the land of the living,” when he ‘suffered, and died, and was buried,’ would be considered by JEHOVAH, as a propitiatory Sacrifice; and therefore as bearing the guilt, imputed to him, and the punishment, due to those, in behalf of whom he suffered. And therefore as the LORD, every where in the law, speaks of the typical atonements and the smell of the burning victims, as “a sweet savour;” because this was a display of his righteous hatred of sin, and determination so to punish it in the sufferings of the person here spoken of; JEHOVAH is said to “take pleasure in bruising him, and in putting him to grief, and making his soul an offering for sin:” that is, he took pleasure in the display thus given of his glorious holiness and justice, as connected with “the praise of the glory of his grace.” This accords to the language of the apostle: “Christ hath given himself for us, an offering and a Sacrifice to God of a sweet smelling savour.”*

* Eph. v. 2.

It is equally manifest, that the person predicted, after “having been cut off from the land of the living,” and after having been buried, “should see his seed, and prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord should prosper in his hand.” But how could this be, except he rose again? “Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and was buried, and rose again on the third day, according to the Scriptures.”* Let another interpretation, equally satisfactory, be given by those who reject this: and let them not suppose, that “the oracles of God” have no meaning. “He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by the knowledge of him shall my righteous servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities.” The person spoken of is here called “the righteous servant of JEHOVAH;” this wholly excludes the idea of an individual, or a nation, suffering for personal or national transgression. It is declared, that “he shall bear the iniquity of those whom he justifies.” Not only should he suffer, to exempt them from suffering; but their iniquity should be imputed to him, and laid on him, as on the legal sacrifices. Thus he would “justify many;” or entitle them to the reward of righteousness, “by the knowledge of him;” which is equivalent, in this view, to believing in him: and as this was his great object in thus suffering and dying, he would, in justifying many, “see of the travail” (or agony) of his soul, (when God “made his soul a sacrifice for sin;”) and “be satisfied;” as the mother, who “as soon as she is delivered remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world.”

“Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was

* 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4.

“numbere with the transgressors; and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.” Here the fact, of the death of the person predicted, is again repeated in emphatical language; to shew the certainty of that event, which would be so incredible to the persons immediately concerned. It is also stated that he would not only die a violent death, but this death would not be in war, not by assassination, not by a private murder, but by an ignominious execution; being “numbered with malefactors.” It is likewise repeated, that “he bare the sin of many;” so that, while in the sight of man he died as a justly condemned malefactor, in the sight of God he was regarded as a spotless sacrifice, atoning for the sins of others. In consequence of this, implying as before his resurrection, it is added; “he made intercession for the transgressors.” “It is Christ that died, yea, rather is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us.”* I do not quote this passage as authority; but merely to shew, with what exactness and ease, the language of the apostle interprets the words of the prophet.

Consider Satan, then, as the great and powerful enemy of God, and as lording it over our fallen race: how obvious is it to interpret the beginning of the verse, to predict the effects of the sufferings, death, resurrection, and intercession of the person predicted; when the serpent and his seed, having “bruised his heel;” he began immediately to crush the serpent’s head; and to rescue millions of wretched slaves from Satan’s destructive bondage? “Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son; in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins.”† “Thus he saw his seed;” for these redeemed persons are counted to him for a generation or progeny. But I by no means intend to give an adequate comment on the chapter: I would merely touch on some prominent particulars; shewing, what must be found in the person and the facts, which fulfil such a prophecy. It is not requisite to enlarge on the Christian interpretation. No other even plausible interpretation has yet been given: nor does it appear possible, that any should be given; for nothing can be more remote from such a completion in the MESSIAH, than the expectations of the Jews are at present.

* Rom. viii. 31.

† Col. i. 13, 14.

I would only add, that it is by no means sufficient, in order to subvert the argument from this prophecy, concerning the Messiah, that he would suffer, and die by a publick execution as a malefactor, in man's esteem, but in reality as a Sacrifice for sin, and would rise from the dead, become an intercessor, "justify many," and set up a kingdom on the ruins of the usurped dominion of Satan; it is, I say, wholly insufficient to subvert this argument, to make objections, to propose other readings or translations; or to argue in a way of speculation against it. Another, and more satisfactory interpretation must be adduced, or nothing to the purpose can be done. The grand outline must be otherwise interpreted, or our interpretation must be admitted, and at least silently allowed to be unanswerable; a very common and convenient way of disposing of unanswerable books, and by far the best way, in policy, of leaving them to fall into oblivion.

Did this prophecy stand single in the Scripture, there might be some ground for hesitation as to the strong conclusions to be drawn from it: but this is so far from being the case, that a history of our Lord's sufferings, and death, and even the minute circumstances of it, might be compiled in the very words of the ancient prophets; only, on some occasions substituting the preterite for the future.

We will therefore now proceed to take a concise view of another remarkable prophecy. The twenty second Psalm opens with the very words, which our Lord used on the cross, only substituting the Syriack or Chaldee word, for the Hebrew; Sabachthani, for עֲבָדְתִּי. "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me." This might be the less remarkable, were not the coincidence at the beginning carried throughout, in language which never suited any other person; nor is there the least probability, that it ever will. It is not necessary, that every part of the Psalm should be gone through: The Speaker in it says, "But I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people. All they that see me, laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying, He trusted on the LORD, that he would deliver him; let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him." This might indeed be in some sense spoken by David, especially in respect of the ill usage, with which he met from Israel, during Absalom's rebellion. Yet the language is more energetick, than even that usage warranted; and it was not literally fulfilled: for, though enemies at a distance spake and acted most cruelly and contumeliously to David; all who approached him, except Shimei, treated him with great respect and affection. But who, that has read the New Testament, can help perceiving how exactly and literally it was fulfilled, while Jesus hung on the cross? "They that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads, and saying, Thou, that destroyest the temple and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross. Likewise also the chief priests mocking him, with the scribes and “elders, said, He saved others, himself he cannot save.

 “If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down “from the cross, and we will believe him. He trusted in “God: let him deliver him, if he will have him; for he “said, I am the Son of God.” The thieves also, who “were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth.”*
 This concurrence of the rude multitude, with those in authority, with the principal ministers of religion, and with the most learned men of the nation, in reviling and insulting a poor sufferer on a cross; joined with the insults of his fellow sufferers, is unparalleled in the history of mankind; but it most exactly fulfilled the prophecy under consideration, as well as many others to the same purpose.—
 “In my adversity they rejoiced, and gathered themselves “together: yea, the very abjects gathered themselves toge“ther.”† Nothing occurs in the history of David like this: Nor indeed can any instance be produced, in which the prophecy before us received a literal interpretation, except in the history of Jesus of Nazareth. It is also remarkable, that the Psalm contains no confession of sin, or any thing in the least intimating the criminality of the sufferer: whereas David, in all the other Psalms, which he wrote, during those calamities, which he suffered from Absalom, continually recurs to the sins, which had occasioned them. So far from this, the Speaker uses words concerning himself, which no mere man could in strict propriety use. “Thou didst make me to hope, when I “was upon my mother’s breasts.”

Again, “Many bulls have compassed me; strong bulls
 “of Bashan have beset me round: they gaped upon me
 “with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion.
 “I am poured out like water; and all my bones are out of “joint: my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of

* Ps. xxii. 6—8. Matt. xxvii. 39—44.

† Ps. xxxv. 15.

“ my body: my strength is dried up like a potsherd, and “ my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; and thou hast brought “ me into the dust of death.”* David was never thus surrounded by powerful and fierce enemies, till brought down to the dust of death: on the contrary, he was, in his severest trials, surrounded by faithful friends and followers, who valued his life more than their own; and he lived to triumph over all enemies, and ended his life in great honour and prosperity. But “ consider Jesus,” surrounded not only by insulting multitudes, not only by the powerful chief priests, rulers, and scribes, but also by the Roman soldiers; scourged, mocked, crowned with thorns, nailed to the cross; the raising up of which, and placing it in its foot, shook or dislocated his bones; parched with thirst, fainting in languor and anguish; and at length expiring;
 and you have a most striking accomplishment of a most extraordinary prediction: nor can any other example be adduced from universal history, which accords to it, in a similar manner. Sufferers in extremity are commonly compassionate, if not by the rude multitude, yet by superior persons: or if the superiors be hardened against them, the people often sympathize with them. This has almost always been the case, with martyrs in general; but it was not the case of Jesus the Nazarene: even his disciples forsook him, and were afraid to own him.

“ For dogs have compassed me: the assembly of the “ wicked hath inclosed me; they pierced my hands and my “ feet: I may tell all my bones; they look and stare upon “ me.”—“ Of whom speaketh the prophet this? Of himself?
 “ or of some other man?” Of what other man? Of Jesus, and of him only.

It is true, that in the Hebrew text, the clause rendered,
 “ They pierced my hands and my feet,” stands, “ as a lion,

* Ps. xxii. 12—15.

“my hands and my feet.” But this contains no clear meaning at all. The Septuagint, which is certainly more ancient than the Christian Æra, and the work of Jews, evidently read it, as we do, (αρυξαν χειρας μου και ποδας) “they dug my hands “and my feet.” Some indeed think the word compounded of כָּרַח and אָרַי, and to mean, “they dug as a lion my “hands, &c. :” but it does not appear how this construction can be maintained. It is more obvious to allow, that a trivial alteration has taken place in the text, through the error of some ancient transcriber. But, however that may be; “the hands and the feet” of the sufferer were especially affected, and no punishment, yet invented by the cruel ingenuity of man, ever so affected “the hands and “the feet” as crucifixion, by nailing them to the cross, and suspending, in great measure, if not wholly, the weight of the body, on the nails thus driven through those exquisitely sensible parts of the human frame.

It may be doubted whether crucifixion were originally a Roman punishment, but it was not used in Israel. The “hanging on a tree” mentioned in the scripture, was suspension of the dead corpse after execution; or, perhaps, sometimes death by suspension, or strangulation: and there can scarcely be a reasonable doubt, but that the Holy Spirit, speaking by the Psalmist, pointed out the special manner of the Messiah’s death, above a thousand years before the Christian Æra.

“They part my garments among them, and they cast “lots upon my vesture.”* Three of the Gospels, in which the fulfilment of this prediction stands recorded, were extant at an early period; when either Jews or Romans might have denied the fact if they had been able: yet this was never done. The singular circumstance, that while the other garments of Jesus were divided into portions; his vesture should be so formed, that the soldiers rather chose to cast lots for it, than to rend it, is worthy of special notice: for, whatever any others, concerned in these transactions might be supposed to do, from regard to the predictions of the prophets; the Roman soldiers cannot be imagined to have regulated their conduct by them. Thus the prophetick history becomes more and more circumstantial: and in whom was it ever realized, except in Jesus of Nazareth? Have then the words of the Psalmist any meaning? and what is that meaning, if it be not that which Christians maintain? Still the simile recurs, A lock of such intricate and complicated wards, that no key but one, can be found, however forcibly applied, to move it; and that one opens it by a touch. Is not this the key, which was made for the lock? Who can reasonably doubt it?

* Ps. xxii. 18. Matt. xxvii. 25. Mark xv. 24. Luke xxiii. 34. John ix. 23, 24.

“But be not thou far from me: O LORD O my strength, haste thee to help me. Deliver my soul from the sword, thy darling from the power of the dog.” (YACHADIKΑ; thy only One, unicus, unigenitus. Robertson. ΤΗΝ ΜΟΝΟΥΓΕΝΗ ΜΕ, my only begotten, femin. Septuagint. The substantive is masculine, and the pronoun is the second person, in the original. The translators, probably, supposed the word to coincide with my soul; but the idea of only begotten is recognized.)—“Save me from the lions’ mouth; for thou hast heard me from the horns of the unicorns.”*

Immediately after this, he who had complained in such doleful lamentations, and who had been “brought into the dust of death,” bursts forth in a most triumphant manner: the last clause quoted being something such a connecting step to transition from the depth of suffering and debasement, to the glory which followed, as our Lord’s last words on the cross were: “Father, into thy

* Ps. x xii. 19, 20.

“hands I commend my Spirit.”—“I will declare thy name unto my brethren;* in the midst of the congregation will I praise thee.—Ye that fear the Lord, praise him. All ye seed of Jacob, glorify him; and fear him, all ye seed of Israel: for he hath not despised nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted, neither hath he hid his face from him; but when he cried unto him he heard.”†

“My praise shall be of thee in the great congregation; I will pay my vows before them that fear him. The meek shall eat and be satisfied; they shall praise the Lord that seek him; your heart shall live for ever.”‡

Who can read these verses, as compared with the preceding part of the Psalm, without being reminded of the risen Saviour conversing with his disciples; and commissioning the apostles to preach to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem; and of their addresses and exhortations to the Jews, before they turned to the Gentiles?§ Especially what can be made of the clause, as referred to David, or any other person, than Jesus: “The meek shall eat and be satisfied—your heart shall live for ever?”|| Let the reader carefully and impartially compare with this clause, the scripture referred to, and he must be struck with the coincidence.

Hitherto, however, Israel exclusively may be considered as spoken of; but the next verse predicts the conversion of the Gentiles all over the earth, as our Lord intimated, when the Greeks wanted to see him: “And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men to me. This he said, signifying what death he should die.”¶ Thus the prophecy; “All the ends of the earth shall remember themselves, and shall turn unto the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him: for the kingdom is the Lord’s, and he is the

* John xvii. 6. 26.

† Heb. v. 7.

‡ Ps. xxii. 22—26.

§ Acts xiii. 26. 38, 39.

|| John vi. 48—58.

¶ John xii. 20—33

“Governor among the people. All that be fat upon earth shall eat and worship; all that go down to the dust, shall bow before him:* and none can keep alive” (or make alive) “his own soul. A seed shall serve him, it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation.”† What can these verses mean, if referred to David, or to any other, than the Messiah? Except as referred to him, of whom Isaiah says, “He shall be called, the everlasting Father,” (or the Father of the everlasting age,) and whom the apostle calls “The second Adam, the Lord from heaven;” from whom all the true church derive spiritual and eternal life, as all men derive natural life from the first Adam? This concurs with what was before adduced from Isaiah; “He shall see of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied.” “He shall see his seed.”‡ With evident reference to this, the apostle applies to the Christian church many of those things, which were spoken of Israel by the Lord: “Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people.”§ And can it be said, that the words of the Psalmist, connected with the preceding verses, do not warrant this application?—“They shall come, and shall declare his righteousness, unto a people that shall be born, that the Lord hath done this.”||

Thus the Psalm contains a regular prediction, which has received an exact accomplishment, even to minuteness, in “the sufferings of Christ, and the glory which followed;” except that which remains to be fulfilled, when “the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.”¶ If this most obvious and easy interpretation be rejected; let another be produced, not of a few expressions, but of the whole prophecy, which can stand a competition

* Phil. ii. 8—11.

† Ps. xxii. 27—30.

‡ Is. ix. 5. liii. 10—12.

§ 1 Pet. ii. 9, 10.

|| Ps. xxii. 31.

¶ Rev. xi. 15.

with it. Till this be done, our interpretation must be conceded to be the true one:

A few extracts alone, from other predictions, must now be adduced; which corroborate our interpretation of these scriptures, which have been more fully examined. The sixty-ninth Psalm might be shewn to be throughout a prophecy of the Messiah; fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, and in the judgments which came upon the Jews, because they rejected and crucified him. But, as I only mean to call the attention of the reader to these prophecies, and not to write an exposition of them, I shall merely quote one passage; “Reproach “hath broken my heart, and I am full of heaviness, and I “looked for some to take pity, but there was none, and for “comforters, but I found none. They gave me also gall to “eat, and when I was thirsty, they gave me vinegar to “drink.”* David was indeed often extremely ill-treated, both by Saul and his adherents, and in Absalom’s rebellion: but when was he destitute of faithful adherents and affectionate comforters? When was this the case with any one of whom we read in scripture, except Job, who was a remarkable type of the Messiah? The literal fulfilment of the latter verse, in Jesus of Nazareth, is well known; and the persons concerned, assuredly did not intend to fulfil the scriptures.†

Again, in Isaiah One says, “Wherefore when I came, was “there no man? When I called, was there none to answer?
“Is my hand shortened, that it cannot redeem, or have I
“no power to deliver? I clothe the heavens with blackness;
“I make sackcloth their covering.‡—The Lord God hath “given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know “how to speak a word in season to him that is weary. He

* Ps. lix. 20, 21.

† Matt. xxvii. 34, 48. John xix. 28, 29.

‡ Matt. xxvii. 43.

“wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth my ear to hear as the learned. The LORD God hath opened mine ear,* and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; I hid not my face from shame and spitting; for the LORD God will help me.”†

Let the reader carefully observe, that the person, who speaks throughout, is the same, without the least intimation of a change: and who was this person, who united such divine dignity, authority, and power; so much meekness and condescension in teaching and comforting the weary; and such submission to the most contemptuous and cruel usage, with full confidence of victory and triumph? Who but he who “endured the cross, and despised the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God?” In whom was this prediction ever fulfilled, but in Jesus of Nazareth? Let the fulfilment of it in any other person be adduced, if there ever was any. It is a prophecy of a divine Messiah, IMMANUEL; who was treated with indignity and opprobrium, and who triumphed over all: and the second verse shews the reason, why the Jews have, during so many ages, been, as it were, divorced from the LORD. “Wherefore when I came, was there no man? When I called, was there none to answer?” For according to the Evangelist, “He came to his own, and his own received him not.”‡

The prophecy of Daniel has already been considered, in another part of the general argument; and, I am persuaded, that the Christian interpretation has been confirmed, not indeed beyond contradiction, but beyond all refutation. I shall here only call the reader’s attention to the language employed, in respect “of Messiah the Prince,” who should be “cut off, but not for himself.” Our argument does not rest on the words "not for himself." It is undeniable, that Messiah the "Prince" there spoken of, would, according to the prophet, "be cut off;" that is, die by violence, and not a natural death: while the language previously used, coinciding, as that expression does, with the words of Isaiah, shews, that while he died, in man's esteem as a criminal, he suffered in reality, not as a martyr, but as an ATONING SACRIFICE for sin: "To make an end of sins," or of sin-offerings, "and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness."* How could this be verified in king Agrippa, or in any other man, of whom the records of history make mention?

* Ps. xl. 6.

† Is. l. 1–9.

‡ John i. 11.

Again, Of whom does the prophet Zechariah speak, or rather JEHOVAH by him? "I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and supplication; and they shall look on me, whom they have pierced; and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only Son." The Christian interpretation is known.—It is Immanuel, who speaks of the Jews, whose ancestors "pierced his hands and feet," and temples, and sides, by the Roman soldiers employed in mocking and crucifying him; whose blood the Jews imprecated "upon them and their children;" and whose posterity have, in every age consented, with full approbation, to the deed of their fathers;† thus "crucifying the Son of God afresh, and putting him to open shame:"‡ but who will ere long, by the "pouring out of the Spirit upon them," look to him with intensely penitent sorrow, and with obedient faith and love. May the Lord speedily vouchsafe this "pouring out of the Spirit" on Israel; and thus, according to another prophecy, "take away the stony heart out of their flesh, and give them a heart of flesh."§

* Dan. ix. 24. Is. liii. 10—12.

† Matt. xxvii. 25. John xix. 37.

Heb. vi. 6. ‡ συνευδοκεῖτε, Luke xi. 48.

§ Ez. xi. 19, 20. xxxvi. 25—27.

I shall close this part with another prediction from the same prophet. "Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, against the Man that is my Fellow, saith the LORD of hosts; smite the Shepherd." Who is this person, whom JEHOVAH owns as "his SHEPHERD?" not as one of his shepherds, much less 'an idol-shepherd,' but exclusively his Shepherd? and "the Man," the only Man, who is "his FELLOW?" Is it not Immanuel; whose "name is Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace?"* Is it not he, of whom another prophet speaks, "I will set one Shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them; he shall be their Shepherd, and I THE LORD will be their God; and my Servant David, a Prince among them: I the LORD have spoken it?"† Is it not he of whom Micah prophesies:—"Out of thee," (Bethlehem,) "shall he come forth unto me, that is to be Ruler in Israel; WHOSE GOINGS FORTH HAVE BEEN FROM OF OLD, FROM EVERLASTING."—"And he shall stand and feed, in the strength of the LORD, in the majesty of the name of the LORD his God: and they shall abide: for now shall he be great unto the ends of the earth?"‡ Surely this is He, whom JEHOVAH calls "My SHEPHERD: the Man that is my FELLOW." Could this language be used with truth of any other shepherd? Where do we read any thing like it of David, or any of those who fed Israel most faithfully? No, here is "the GOOD Shepherd, who laid down his life for the sheep:" "the GREAT Shepherd, who made our peace by the blood of the everlasting covenant;" "Yea, the CHIEF Shepherd, who shall appear" to judge the world.§

But what does "the LORD of hosts" say, concerning this

* Is. vii. 14. ix. 6, 7.

† Ez. xxxiv. 23, 24.

‡ Mic. v. 2-5.

§ John x. 11-14. Heb. xiii. 19, 20. 1 Pet. v. 4.

his SHEPHERD? “Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd. —Smite the Shepherd.” How can this be?—The sword, which JEHOVAH calls to awake, must be that of avenging justice. Why must this “sword smite his Shepherd?” Let Isaiah answer the question: “He was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities.—All we, like sheep, have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way; and the LORD hath caused to meet on him the iniquity of us all.”—“It pleased the LORD to bruise him: he hath put him to grief; when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin; he shall see his seed; he shall prolong his days; and the pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in his hand.”*

Have we then no ground in the Old Testament to conclude, that the promised Messiah, would, when he came, be rejected, despised, hated, persecuted, put to death as a malefactor, even crucified; yet die as an atoning Sacrifice for sin? Certainly, these things ought not to be passed over in silence, or without notice; by him, who would disprove the Messiahship of Jesus the Nazarene. Certainly, these prophecies must all be satisfactorily explained, in another meaning; or else, our appeal to the Old Testament cannot be set aside, or resisted. Indeed I have by no means brought forward all the proof of this from the Old Testament: but when what I have adduced, has been disposed of; some other Christian writer, (for my age and infirmities exclude the thought of my attempting it,) will cut out for the answerer further employment; if that ever be needful, which indeed I do not think it will be.

Our next particular has been so far anticipated, that little remains to be done.

3. It is predicted in the Old Testament, that the Messiah should arise from the dead, and ascend into heaven; and that most glorious effects would follow his ascension and exaltation.

* Is. liii.

They, however, for whose benefit I chiefly write, if once convinced of those facts, concerning the Messiah, which have been stated, will not require much proof of this particular; and without this conviction, all proof must be disregarded: it therefore is not requisite to enlarge upon it.

The passage in the sixteenth Psalm can never admit of any other interpretation. "I have set the LORD always before me: for he is at my right hand; I shall not be moved. Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth; my flesh also shall rest in hope: for thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thy holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt shew me the path of life."* The person here speaking evidently considers himself as one, who was about to die and be buried; "My flesh shall rest in hope." His soul would go into Hades, הַיְשׁוּב the unseen world, but would not be left there: his body would be a corpse, but it would "not see corruption;" that is, not remain dead, so long as to begin to putrefy, and return to the dust. On the contrary, he was confident that he should arise, not to remain on earth, and die a second time, as those who were raised by miracle did; but that he should be shewn the path of life; and enter the presence of God, "where is fulness of joy, and pleasures at his right hand for evermore."—Now in what other person were all these particulars ever verified, except in Jesus of Nazareth, "the Holy One of God?" But I forbear: the apostle's argument is so conclusive, and proved so efficacious; that I need only adduce it; not as authority; but as an argument, requiring an answer, in the same manner as my arguments may do: for I expect a Jew to consider it in the same light.—"Men and brethren, let me speak freely to you

* Ps. xvi. 8—11.

“of the patriarch David; for he is both dead and buried,
 “and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore,
 “being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with “an oath unto him, that of the fruit of his loins, accord“ing to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his “throne: he, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection
 “of Christ; that his soul was not left in hell, neither did “his flesh see corruption.”—In like manner, another apostle says; “He saith, Thou shalt not suffer thy holy one to “see corruption. For David, after he had served his ge“neration, by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was “laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption: but he whom “God raised again, saw no corruption.”*

Indeed, every prediction of the glorious and enduring kingdom of the Messiah, (when once it is established, that a Messiah was predicted, who should bleed and die,) immediately becomes a demonstration of his resurrection. Intimations of this are given, in several other scriptures, as, “Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast forth her dead:” Who here speaks? Even he who “is risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of the resurrection; who said, I am the Resurrection and the Life!”†

It is also foretold in the scriptures, that the Messiah should ascend into heaven, as introductory to the grand establishment of his kingdom. “Thou hast ascended on high;” thou hast led captivity captive; thou hast received gifts for men; yea, for the rebellious also, that the Lord “God might dwell among them.”—Who is this, who ascending on high, and leading captivity captive, received

* Acts ii. 30—32. xiii. 34—37.

† Is. xxvi. 19. Jolu xi. 25.

1 Cor. xv. 20. See also Hos. vi. 2. xiii. 14.

gifts for men? If JEHOVAH, from whom did he receive them? Yet the whole context speaks of JEHOVAH. If not JEHOVAH, who is intended? Of whom are these things spoken? Is not the apostle's application of the passage, far more obvious and reasonable, than any other which can be adduced or imagined?—"Wherefore he saith, when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men. Now that he ascended, what is it, but that he also first descended into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended, is the same also who ascended far above all heavens, that he might fill all things. And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, &c."* "Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father, the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear. For David is not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool."†

I do not expect, that Jews should receive these quotations from the New Testament, as the word of God; but can they deny, that they are at least very opposite and probable expositions of texts, which scarcely admit of any other intelligible interpretation?

The consequence of the Messiah's sufferings, death, resurrection, ascension, and exaltation, as "a Priest upon his throne," at the right hand of the Father; in respect of those, whether Jews or Gentiles, who were "his people, willing in the day of his power;" has already appeared, in that part of the work, in which the effects of the coming of Jesus are considered. Far more might indeed be added, concerning the predictions which clearly foretold these effects,

* Ps. lxxviii. 18. Eph. iv. 8—12.

† Ps. cx. 1, 2. Acts ii. 33—35.

and connected them with his humiliation: and something has been adduced, on the fifty-third of Isaiah and on the twenty-second Psalm, to this effect. But I would now hasten to a close.

I have only one more subject to adduce, which must not by any means be passed over; yet I mention it with a kind of trepidation; lest I should seem, as a Gentile, 'to boast 'over the Jews,' or not to have suitable candour and good will towards them. But the facts are undeniable; namely, the desolations of Jerusalem and the temple in less than forty years after the crucifixion of Jesus; with the unspeakable miseries endured by the Jews, and the incredible slaughter made of them, during the siege of Jerusalem, as recorded by their own historian Josephus; and their despised and oppressed condition ever since, for above seventeen hundred years. These facts have exceedingly perplexed the Jews themselves; and they cannot account for it, that their sufferings, since the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, have continued so much longer than the Babylonish captivity did; though they had not previously been guilty of any direct idolatry. It would however answer little purpose, to assign the reasons of this most extraordinary event, from the writings of Christians, or even from those contained in the New Testament: but it is of the highest consequence to call the attention of the Jews to what their own prophets spake on this subject.

It is the design of these testimonies, to ascertain indisputably, what has been the real cause of these dire and long continued judgments of God, on his ancient people; by shewing the manner in which some of the prophets connect the rejection, sufferings, and death of the Messiah, with the desolations of Jerusalem, and the dispersion of the Jews.— Thus Gabriel says to Daniel: "After threescore and two weeks, Messiah shall be cut off, but not for himself:

“ and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy
 “ the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be “ with a flood, and to the end of the war desolations are “ determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many “ for one week; and in the midst of the week, he shall “ cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease. And for the “ overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, “ even until the consummation, and that determined shall be “ poured upon the desolate.”*

What attentive and impartial reader can help seeing and acknowledging, in this prophecy, the connexion between “the Messiah being cut off,” and the predicted desolations? Is it not here expressly foretold, that the coming of the Messiah, and his sufferings and death, would eventually occasion, at least, the desolations of Jerusalem, the termination of the temple-service, the awful miseries inflicted on the Jews by the idolatrous Romans, and the introduction of their permanent dispersion? And did not these events follow speedily after the Jews had cut off our Lord Jesus Christ? It is in vain to criticise on single words or expressions, or to make objections to this or the other explanation: nothing but an interpretation of THE WHOLE PROPHECY, and of every clause, in another more satisfactory manner; grounded, as ours is, on known and undeniable facts; can do any thing effectual to obviate the conclusion, that Jesus is the Messiah, and that, by rejecting and crucifying him, and cruelly persecuting his disciples, the nation of the Jews filled up that measure of iniquity, which brought upon them their past and present sufferings.—“ O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that “ killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto “ thee, How often would I have gathered thy children, even “ as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings and ye
 “ would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.

* Dan. x. 26, 27.

“For I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth, till “ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of “the Lord.”* These calamities therefore will last, till the “Spirit of grace and supplications be poured on them, and “they shall look” with penitent sorrow and genuinc faith
 “to him whom they pierced,” and have crucified afresh through all succeeding generations. But then the “Foun“tain for sin and uncleanness shall be opened for them.”
 For in that day, when God shall restore Israel, they shall thus look unto him whom they pierced.†

Another prophecy of Zechariah must here again be adduced. “Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, against the “Man that is my Fellow, saith the LORD of hosts. Smite
 “the Shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered; and I will “turn my hand upon the little ones. And it shall come “to pass, that in all the land, two parts thereof shall be “cut off and die, but the third shall be left therein. And “I will bring the third part through the fire; and I will “refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as “gold is tried; and they shall call on my name, and I “will hear them. I will say, It is my people, and they “shall say, The LORD is my God. Behold the day of the “LORD cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the “midst of thee: and I will gather all nations against “Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and “the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of “the city shall go forth into captivity; and the residue of “the people shall not be cut off from the city.”‡

This passage begins with the death of the Messiah, the Shepherd and Fellow of JEHOVAH; by the sword of his avenging justice, yet by the wicked hands of the Jews. It proceeds, to shew the terrible vengeance of God on the nation, "two thirds shall die:" it points out "the remnant according to the election of grace;" their trials, preservation, and sanctification. It proceeds to represent the dreadful siege and taking of Jerusalem; and to intimate, that half would be destroyed in the siege, or carried into captivity, and disposed of in different ways. Difficulties may rest on some expressions; but this is the undeniable outline. Namely, the Sword of JEHOVAH shall first "awake against his SHEPHERD:" and then, against those, who murdered his SHEPHERD, against the nation of the Jews, except a tried remnant; against Jerusalem, where his blood was shed; and finally, against the Roman empire, who had been the instruments, both of crucifying his SHEPHERD, and destroying Jerusalem and the Jews; not from regard to him, but from ambition, rapacity, revenge, and enmity to the true God and true religion. And can any reflecting and impartial man doubt, whether the past and present sufferings of the Jews were not the consequences of rejecting and crucifying their Messiah, and that these events were here predicted?

* Matt. xxiii. 34—39.

† Zec. xii. 10—14. xiii. 1.

‡ Zec. xiii. 7—9. xiv. 1, 2.

The Psalmist also concludes a doleful account of his sufferings, in which there is sufficient proof that he spake as the type of the Messiah, by saying, "Reproach hath broken my heart, and I am full of heaviness: and I looked for some to have pity on me, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none. They gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink." He then proceeds, in this awful manner: "Let their table become a snare unto them; and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap: Let their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake. Pour out thine indignation upon them, and let thy wrathful anger take hold of them. Let their habitation be deso-

“late; and let none dwell in their tents. For they persecute him whom thou hast smitten,” (the Messiah;) “and they talk to the grief of those whom thou hast wounded;” (his disciples.) “Add iniquity to their iniquity; and let them not come into thy righteousness. Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written among the righteous.”*

Many of the passages in the Psalms, which appear as imprecations, may perhaps more properly be rendered as prophecies: yet in either way they should not be understood, as pertaining to the personal enemies of the Psalmist, but to those of the Lord and his Messiah, of whom David was an eminent type. But the passage here quoted is strictly an imprecation; several of the verbs being in the imperative: and there is scarcely room for a doubt, but that they denounce sentence against the Jewish nation for rejecting and crucifying their Messiah, and persecuting his apostles and disciples. If, indeed, these words stood alone, in this argument, some doubt might be entertained; and an immense difficulty must remain, concerning the speaker, supposing him inspired by the Holy Spirit; and the persons intended, and the manner in which the prediction has been fulfilled. Certainly David, according to the history, was, during Absalom’s rebellion, by no means disposed thus to curse his opponents; and, after its termination, no special judgments fell upon Israel, answerable to them: and when, on his numbering the people, wrath was upon them; he considered it as the punishment of his own sin, and prayed, “Lo, I have sinned, and done wickedly: but these sheep, what have they done? Let thine hand be against me, and against my father’s house.”† But when we view the words of the Psalm, in connection with the clear and express predictions, before considered; their import and fulfilment is evident; and the application of them in the New Testament fully satisfactory.*

* Ps. lxi. 20—28.

† 2 Sam. xxiv. 17.

Several other prophetic indications to the same effect might be adduced:† but these are the most clear and decisive; and they are quite sufficient. I shall however adduce again the words of God by Moses. “I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee; and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him: and it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him.”‡ If the Messiah be meant, and if Jesus were the Messiah; there can be no longer any doubt concerning the consequences of the Messiah’s coming, the rejection by the Jews; or concerning the real cause of the long continued calamities of the nation. “Do not think, that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you: even Moses, in whom ye trust. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?”§

Thus, I trust, it has been shewn, that the prophecies of the Old Testament, if read attentively and repeatedly, and carefully compared with each other, by any competent person, who could, (if that may be supposed possible,) consider himself wholly unconcerned in the result; would appear to him, to predict a Messiah, who would meet with a contemptuous and hostile reception from his own nation; who would, notwithstanding his wisdom, holiness, meekness, and numerous miracles of love and mercy, lead an afflicted and suffering life, and this closed by a violent

* Acts i. 20—22. Rom. xi. 7—11. † Mal. iii. 1—4. iv. 1. 4, 5.

‡ Deut. xviii. 18, 19. Comp. Acts iii. 22, 23. vii. 35—37. 51—53.

§ John v. 45—47. See also Matt. xxiii. 34—37. Luke xi. 49—51. xiii. 33—37. 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16.

and ignominious death, by that kind of punishment, which the law pronounced accursed;* as a Malefactor in man's estimation, as an atoning Sacrifice for sin, in the judgment of God: That, while he died with malefactors, he would be buried in the tomb of a rich man: that according to the prophets, he would arise from the dead, before his body "began to see corruption:" That "he would ascend to heaven" as a triumphant Conqueror, to be seated "at the right hand of God." That in his high exaltation as "a Priest upon his throne," he would establish a glorious, extensive, permanent, and increasing kingdom: And that the immediate effect to the Jewish nation, (a remnant excepted,) would be, their rejection for a season from being the peculiar people of God, who would leave "their name as a curse to his chosen; for the LORD God would slay them, and call his people by another name;"† together with the desolation of Jerusalem and the temple; the termination, or at least, the long-continued interruption of almost the whole ceremonial of Moses; and the dispersion of the wretched remains of the Jews, through the nations of the earth.

I have already so often shewn it; that I have not in this part particularly stated what, I firmly believe, such a student of prophecy would conclude from the Old Testament, of 'the Restoration of Israel;' by receiving, in penitent faith and love, their long rejected Messiah, and their subsequent honour and distinction of love and gratitude from all other nations, now converted to JEHOVAH and his Christ, as the channels, through which all the blessings of true religion, and eternal salvation, have flowed to them.

And now, after this whole argument, I can most confidently adopt the apostle's words, "Brethren, my heart's desire, and prayer to God, for Israel is, that they might

* Gal. iii. 13.

† Is. lxxv. 15.

“be saved.”—The argument cannot be done justice to, without bringing forward many things which strongly imply blame, to the former and present generations of the Jews: but, God knoweth, that this is not done, in any self-preference, or disposition to glory over them. There is one thing peculiarly pleasing to me, in stating my views to them; that I am not constrained to say with Jeremiah, “I have not desired the woeful day, O LORD, thou knowest.” I trust “the woeful day” with Israel is nearly terminated, and that blessed and glorious times, to that nation especially, though not exclusively, are at hand. It is not likely, that I should live to witness them: but it seems to my feeling, as if the knowing of them, would add extacy to joy even in heaven; and I should count it one of the greatest honours and pleasures of my life, if any thing I have written should, in the smallest degree, contribute to it. I have not, that I know of, written one line, but in the spirit of love; and in transcribing my rough draught, I have been continually reminded of the words of Pope.

‘Poets lose half the praise they would have got,

‘Were it but known what they discreetly blot.

In the eagerness of my natural spirit, many things were put down in the sketch; which they who love controversy would probably have better approved, than what I have sent to the press: and I am aware, as in other instances, that the popularity of the work will suffer by the suppressions; but not the usefulness, which is of infinitely greater importance; and unless we can defend Christianity, and its doctrines, in the Christian spirit of meekness and love, we may obtain the praise of men, but shall not be partakers of “the honour which cometh from God only.” Much I have expunged, lest I should give needless, or injurious, offence; and if any thing remains of this kind, I must intreat a candid construction: for though convinced that “the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of those who “make peace;” I am not in all cases able to discern, what may be inconsistent with this, in what I have written; or to come up to the standard, which I would prescribe to myself.

FINIS.

I N D E X.

N.B. The single inverted commas, in this Index, mark Mr. Crooll's words,— and the double inverted commas mark quotations from scripture. The Figures mark the pages in the Answer. O. T. stands for the Old Testament. N. T. for the New Testament.

A.

- ABNER.—The assertion of a modern Jew, that Abner wrote the cxtth Psalm, and addressed David, proves the difficulty which that Psalm gives the more reflecting Jews, 24.
- ‘ABRAHAM was forty-eight years old, when the earth was divided.’—Abram was not born, according to Moses, till after the death of Peleg, who had his name from that division, 155, 156.
- The true son of Abraham, 258.
- ADAM.—No mystery in his name, 180.—The first and second Adam, 301.
- ADVANTAGES, which the state of the surrounding nations, and of the church, gave Mohammed, 72—74.
- AGE.—That in which Mohammed lived, noted for ignorance, and only exceeded by those which followed, 72.
- AGRIPPA.—‘King Agrippa was Messiah the prince.’ (Dan. ix. 25.) Some account of Agrippa: the extreme absurdity of the notion, 48—50.
- ALL.—The word all added in Gal. iii. 10. does not alter the sense in the least, 226.—It was taken from the Septuagint, 226, 227.
- A Jew should not blame St. Paul for following a translation made by Jews, 227.
- All* is added by Mr. C. without any warrant, in another citation, 252.
- ALLOTMENT of the earth, by regular division, to the seventy families of Noah, a mere dream. It could not have been carried into effect, without the most stupendous miracles, 233, 234.
- ALMANACKS.—New impostures spring up; last their time; are out of date, and succeeded by others, like Almanacks, 133.

- AMBITION and the malignant passions encouraged by Mohammedism, 77.
- ANGELS, whether man was created superior to angels? 51, 52.
- ‘Not called the sons of God’—Not correct, 211.
- ‘Ministered to Israel.’ And to those who were not of Israel, 242.
See GUARDIAN.
- ANGEL.—“The Angel, who redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads.”—
Who was this Angel? 30.
- ANSWER.—Mr. C.’s book seems to challenge an answer, 3.
- ARABS, among whom Mohammed arose, and obtained his first triumphs, extremely illiterate, 72.
- ASCEND.—Predictions in the O. T. that the Messiah would ascend into heaven, 308, 309.
- ASSOCIATION, in Mr. C.’s mind, between the coming of the MESSIAH, and the Restoration of Israel, leads him constantly to assume, as true, the very thing which ought to be proved, 56, 57.
- ASSOCIATORS of creatures, or of the SON of God with God, in worship, condemned in almost every chapter of the Koran, 74.
- ATONEMENT, according to the Old Testament, made, either by the condign punishment of the criminal, or by the innocent suffering death instead of the guilty. The cases of Moses and of Phinehas, 233, 234.

B.

- BARE.—“He poured out his soul unto death, and bare the sin of many, and “made intercession for the transgressors.”—Have these words any meaning? 292, 293.
- BEAR.—“My righteous Servant shall justify many, for he shall bear their “iniquity.” Can any other, except the Christian interpretation, be put on these words? 293.
- BIBLE SOCIETY, British and Foreign, the principal “Standard bearer;” “lifted up by the Spirit of God,” against “the enemy, when he came in “like a flood,” 86.
- A respectful hint to its truly honourable conductors, on the contents at the head of each chapter, in their English Bibles; which are a comment, and often a bad one, 248.
- BLESSED.—Moses did not desire that Israel should be blessed, more than St. Paul did: and we would emulate him, 229.
- BLESSING.—No blessing on Israel, merely as having the law, intimated in O. T. 229.
- The honour of being a blessing to the nations, which belongs to Israel, more desirable, than a monopoly of the blessing, with curses on others, 109, 110.
- That in Num. vi. 23—27, not dissimilar to that 2 Cor. xiii. 14: and accords in some respects with the form of Christian baptism, 267, 268.
- BLESSINGS, spiritual and earthly, distinguished, 161—163.
- Those, which we Gentiles need, and expect from the Messiah, 249.

- BLOOD.—All instituted worship, from Adam's fall to the death of Christ, connected with the shedding of blood, &c. Yet this, after 4000 years, ceased all at once, soon after the death of Christ. How is this, as the appointment of God, to be accounted for? 204, 205.
- ' of Israel cries for vengeance.'—What blood is here included? All blood cries for vengeance on the impenitent murderer, 244.
- BOASTING, or glorying, of Gentiles, whether Christians or not, over the Jews, certainly wrong, but by no means common, 63. True Christians are far from it, and others think too little about such matters, 254.
- BOURBONS, Restoration of, seems to militate against the vast importance attached to the French Revolution, by Mr. C. and many Christian expositors, 209. N. B. This was printed before the late unexpected changes, and nothing is further built on it.
- BREAKER.—Mic. ii. 13. If meant of the Messiah, may be applied in a variety of ways, distinct from that selected by Mr. C. 259.
- BRITAIN.—It is acknowledged by Mr. C. that Jews are better treated in Britain than elsewhere: and this arises from Christianity being better understood among us, 3.
- BRUISE.—" It pleased the LORD to bruise him:—when thou shalt make his " soul an offering for sin." Who is here meant? 291.
- ' BUSHEL of fine wheat,' (Mr. C.'s emblem of Israel,) considered, 234, 235.

C.

- CAPTIVES, including females, as well as the spoil, (a tax being paid,) under Mohammed, belonged to the captors; while slavery, death, or embracing his religion, were proposed to their choice, 78.
- CARNAL MIND.—" The carnal mind" which chooses such things, as Mr. C. says the Jews want from the Messiah, " is death," 249.
- CASTLE.—That of Moses. According to Mr. C. Christianity and Mohammedism are built upon it, and shall fall; but the castle of Moses shall stand for ever. This compared with the prophets, &c. 92, 93.
- CEREMONIAL LAW.—Malachi shews that the Gentiles will become the accepted worshippers of God without it, 255, 256.
- CHALLENGE.—Mr. C.'s book challenges an answer, and he expected one, 3, 4.
- CHRONOLOGY, Inconsistencies in Mr. C.'s, noted, 56.
- CHURCH, Christian, was corrupted by idolatry, sunk in gross ignorance, divided and enfeebled, when Mohammed succeeded in establishing his imposture, 72, 73.
- CIRCUMCISION, ' The seal and crown as given to Abraham:' yet Edom and Ishmael, and all the Mohammedans, share it! 193. 253.
- COBWEB of seventies swept away, by comparing the dates in Genesis with Mr. C.'s, 208.
- COME.—Shall the Messiah come twice? 94--96.
- COMETH.—The Messiah called by the ancient Jews, " He that cometh:" yet after above 1700 years, no Messiah, but Jesus, is come. 40.

- COMING.—‘Time of the Messiah’s coming, an unknown mystery.’ This considered, 50.
- Fixed by Mr. C. to 6000 years from the creation: about 180 years hence, 51.
- of Christ, how meant in the N. T. 63, 64.
- COMMANDMENTS, ‘The ten, contained the whole law of Moses: as many ‘letters in them, as precepts in the whole law!’ 146.
- COMMUNICATE.—Did we not desire to communicate to the Jews the blessings of the Messiah’s kingdom, rather than to share the dominion which they expect; we should leave them to their vain dreams, 249, 250.
- CONCLUSION, conciliatory, 317, 318.
- CONDUCT of the dispersed Jews has not been suited to impress mankind favourably as to their religion, 236, 237.
- CONNECTION, in the prophecies of the O. T. between the rejection and violent death of the Messiah, and the desolations of Jerusalem and the temple, &c. 310—314.
- CONQUEROR.—‘The Messiah, the Conqueror of the world,’ 246.
- CONTENTS, at the head of each chapter, in our smaller Bibles, an inadequate, and often very erroneous, comment, 247, 248.
- CONTROVERSY, between Christians and Jews, has not been hitherto conducted on a comprehensive and enlarged plan, 4.
- CONVERSION of the Gentiles to the true God, may confidently be expected, 59, 60.
- COVENANT.—“He shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; in “the midst of which, he shall cause the oblation to cease.” This must be done by the Messiah predicted in Dan. 46.
- Shewn from the prophets, that God would, under the Messiah, make a new covenant with his people, 147—150.
- That with Abraham and Isaac, &c; and not the Sinai-Covenant, to be remembered by God in favour of Israel, 158, 159.
- of works and of grace, 227.
- COUNTRY, This. See BRITAIN.
- CROOLL, Mr. Regretted, that he speaks so little, and with so little interest, about the vast concerns of eternity, 166, 167.
- CRUCIFIXION, not a punishment used in Israel; yet predicted of the Messiah by David, 298.
- CURSE.—Insinuation, that Paul, like Balaam, wished to curse Israel, refuted, 228, 229.
- CURSES.—Moses pronounces many curses on disobedient Israel, 229.
- CURSED.—‘He’ (Abraham.) ‘cursed them,’ the families among whom the earth was divided; proved from a Psalm of David! 156.
- “CUT OFF from the land of the living,” evidently spoken of the Messiah, compared with Daniel ix. 25, 26. 290.
- CYRUS, the only heathen king called Messiah: the reason, 6.

D.

- DANIEL.---Not the words of God by Daniel; but those of Nebuchadnezzar's baffled magicians, quoted by Mr. C. 16.
- Reasons why the apostles might decline quoting his prophecy of Messiah, Dan. ix. 24—27, in addressing the Jews, 47.
- His prophecy briefly considered, 41—47. Fulfilled in Jesus, and in no other, 303, 304.
- DAVID never treated in the manner described in the xxii. Psalm, nor any person except Jesus, 297.
- DAY, First of the week specially noticed in the N. T. 201.
- DEATH, by which the prophets foretold, that the "Messiah should be cut " off," 286, &c.
- DECLARATION, Answer to, 3, 4.
- "DESIRE of all nations," must mean the Messiah, 36, 37.
- 'DEVILS have power to prophesy?' considered, 124.
- DIE.---Whether the Messiah should die, or not, &c? 282.
- DISREGARD.---The author would disregard the controversy, could he consider the Messiah's kingdom as earthly, 166, 167.
- DOMINION.---Should God assign converted Israel any dominion over other nations, they will use it in love, and their brethren will submit to God and to them for his sake, 190, 197.
- DUST OF DEATH.---He who speaks in the xxii. Psalm, after being brought "into the dust of death," bursts forth in praise and adoration, 299, 300.
- DUTY.---'It was his' (Jesus's) 'duty to have complied with their requests.'---The duty of an ambassador is to follow the instructions of his principal, and not the requests of those to whom he is sent, 126. The false prophets alone thus compliant, Ibid.

E.

- EARTHLY.---What good can a mere earthly kingdom of the Messiah do all the former generations of Israel, or the present, or indeed any? 167.
- EDOM used as a general name of the enemies of God's people; though not Edomites by birth. If so, Israel is a general name of God's people, though not Israelites by birth, 55, 56.
- EFFECTS of Christianity, on morals, society, and even war; in hospitals and schools; in undermining slavery; terminating gladiatorial shews, and the murder of infants, &c: all these good things arising from the coming of Jesus, 69.
- ELOHIM.---GOD. A remark on the word, 26, 27.
- ENEMY.---Mr. C. not an enemy to Christians; his answerer no enemy to Jews, 3.
- ENEMIES.---The enemies to be put under Christ's feet, 246, 247.
- The Messiah will save converted Israel from all Gentile enemies; but this implies neither vengeance nor lordly dominion, 247.

- ENEMIES.—The determined enemies of Israel distinguished, from such as repent of their enmity, and act as cordial friends, 252.
- EQUAL.—‘ He, ’ Jesus, ‘ wished to set up for himself, and be equal with God.’—This compared with another passage in Mr. C. 119.
- ERELLIM.—Lion-like. Not Angels, but Hezekiah’s ambassadors, 242.
- ESTABLISHED.—In consequence of the coming of Jesus, the worship of the true God, instead of abominable idols, was, within 300 years, established throughout the Roman empire, and has since been far more widely extended, 68.
- ETERNAL punishment held by Mohammed; but so stated as admirably to serve his purpose of terrifying his opposers alone, 75.
- EVERLASTING salvation of many millions, if a true worship and a holy life be “ things accompanying salvation,” the consequence of the coming of Jesus, 68.
- EVIL.—All the evils predicted against the Gentiles will be fulfilled; not all supposed by the Jews to be predicted, 243.
- EXPECT.—What events an unconcerned person would be led to expect, from a careful perusal of the prophecies, concerning the Messiah, as the word of God, 315, 316.
- EXPECTATION, General, of a Ruler, or Rulers, immediately, to arise out of Judah, about the time of Jesus, 39.
- Of ancient Jews from the Messiah: that of modern Jews precisely the same, 163, 164.
- That of modern studious Christians, in general, concerning the Restoration of Israel and their felicity, precedency, and true honour, when restored, 164.
- And concerning the conversion of the Gentiles, and the subsequent state of the world, for at least 1000 years, 164, 165.
- EXPECTATIONS.—The extreme vanity of all earthly expectations of the Jews from Messiah, exposed, 166, 167.
- EZEKIEL’S vision of a temple, &c, very obscure: insuperable difficulties attending a literal interpretation of it: nothing can be concluded from it till fulfilled, 157.

F.

- FATHER.—‘ A father is superior to his son:’ not in nature, surely, but seniority, and as the superior relation, 250.
- “ My Father is greater than I.”—He who sends an ambassador, is, as principal, greater than the ambassador who is sent; or his superior, though of the same nature, 272.
- FEAR.—‘ The Gentiles shall fear to come near restored Israel.’—Is it not more desirable, to be loved, than dreaded? 258.
- FINISH.—“ To finish transgression, to make an end of sin, to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal the vision and prophecy.”—All these belong to “ Messiah the Prince,” of whom Daniel prophesied, 45, 46.

- FORCED.—‘The Gentiles forced to acknowledge God, &c. and to receive ‘punishment:’ yet they come of their own accord! Jer. xvi. 19--21. 256.
- FORGIVE.—‘Do they imagine the Messiah will forgive them?’ A vindictive spirit betrayed, 244.
- FORGIVENESS of sin, ‘not with the Messiah,’ considered, 31.
- FORGOT.—‘Christ forgot the whole world.’—Witness his commission to the apostles, and his account of the day of judgment! 111.
- FORTUNE.—‘Good fortune attended him.’ (Mohammed). What is fortune, in the creed of a Jew or Christian? Fortune was a heathen goddess, 91, 92.
- ‘The last fortune of the Gentiles,’ 242.

G.

- GALATIANS.—Remarks on the objections to the doctrine of St. Paul; and against him, for inserting the word all, Gal. iii. 221--228.
- GALL.—“They gave me also gall for my meat, &c.” Ps. lxix. 21, fulfilled in Jesus, 303, 304.
- GENEALOGY of Joseph, in the line of Solomon, given by Matthew; that of Heli, the father-in-law of Joseph, and the father of Mary, in the line of Nathan, given by Luke, 8.
- They who labour to prove both to be the genealogies of Joseph, perplex the subject, and labour in vain: Joseph could not be begotten both by Jacob and Heli, 9.
- No Genealogy can prove Jesus to be the SON of David, according to some Jews, except he had a human father. This examined, 9, 10.
- Less depends on the Genealogies than the Jews suppose, 10, 11.
- Numbers owned Jesus as “the Son of David,” before the genealogies were published, ibid.
- The evangelists only answerable for the faithfulness of their transcripts, 10, 11.
- How do Jews think to prove their expected Messiah to be “the Son of David,” now all genealogies are lost? They cannot even imagine any clearer proof, than we have, concerning Jesus, independent of genealogies, 11.
- GENTILES.—“Times of the Gentiles,” 57--60. Millions of them turned from gross idolatry and iniquity, to the true worship and a holy life, in three hundred years after the coming of Jesus, 65, 70.
- Those among whom Christianity first triumphed, the most civilized, learned, and philosophical part of the world, in an age renowned for genius and learning, 71.
- Its triumphs among uncivilized Gentiles not so fully recorded, 72.
- ‘No Messiah for the Gentiles,’ considered, 98, 99.
- ‘Proof from the N. T. 100.’
- All the families of the Gentiles to be blessed in the Seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, 100, 101.

- GENTILES.—The kings of the Gentiles called on to “kiss the Son,” and to trust in him, 101, 102.
- Prediction in respect of the Gentiles, in Psalm xxii. considered, 102.
- In Psalm lxxii. 103.
- Proof of a Messiah for the Gentiles, from many passages in Isaiah and the other prophets, 103---109.
- ‘No Messiah for the Gentiles;’ that is, for Israel alone, not a hundredth part of the human race, or near it; and neither in prosperity nor character, hitherto, peculiarly distinguished, 109, 110.
- “Israel shall shew forth my praise,” ‘but not the Gentiles,’—added contrary to the tenour of the O. T. 235, 236.
- ‘The Messiah no friend to the Gentiles,’ 246.
- Who laboriously concur in Israel’s Restoration, will not be involved in the destruction of those who oppose it, 260.
- All the Gentiles, according to Mr. C. will become servants to Israel; but whether worshippers of Israel’s God or not, is not made clear, 261.
- Our views of the prophecies which speak of the Gentiles, as becoming servants to Israel, stated, 261, 262.
- As a political question out of our line, 263.
- Conversion of, predicted, Psalm xxii. 300.
- GIBBON, Quotation from, respecting Mohammed ^{sa}.
- GLORY.—The glory of the ~~second temple~~ could not exceed that of Solomon’s, except by the presence of Immanuel, 37, 38.
- GOD.—‘Every man who said he was a God, never died a natural death.’—This considered, 265.
- Hebrew word for God plural. Several things of this kind Antitrinitarians would not have chosen, or previously expected, 267.
- GOD AND MAN.—If Jesus be so, the language of the N. T. exactly what might have been supposed, 275.
- A few texts, at least seeming to imply this, in the O. T. should render all who reverence the oracles of God, more cautious and reverential in speaking on the subject, 25, 26.
- GOG, Battle of, not intended by Joel, in the close of the second chapter, 253, 254.
- GOOD.—‘Jesus could do no good to Israel.’—Not to those of Israel, who would not have him to save and rule them, 56.
- ‘One good family;’ a right to the ‘oracles,’ &c. This language compared with scripture, 154, 155.
- GOOD WILL of increasing numbers among Christians to the Jews; their prayers for them; and readiness of mind to render converted Israel all desirable honour and respect, 247.
- GRASP.—‘It is vain for the Gentiles to grasp at the dominion of the world; that is, under the Messiah. What Gentiles do grasp at this? 195, 196.
- GUARDIAN ANGELS, over different countries, an unscriptural notion, fraught with absurdity, 152, 208.

H.

- HALTER, Mohammed professed to restore the religion of Abraham, the ortho- dox, or the HALTER. The reason of that title, 73.
- HEAVEN.—Mohammed's sensual heaven crowned his licentious religion, and gave it vast attraction to the carnal mind, 77, 78.
- HEROISM.—To prove from the N. T. that none but Jews will be servants of God, is no common degree of heroism, 60, 61.
- HISTORY, that of Jesus, and of the first introduction of Christianity, contained in the N. T. the only original record, of the greatest revolution which ever took place on earth. Neither Jew nor Gentile published any narrative to confront that of the Christians themselves! Even modern opposers draw their information from the N. T.! An extraordinary fact; and without parallel, as a testimony to the veracity of the historians, 130.
- HONOUR, which will be voluntarily rendered to Israel, when converted, by all Christians, as the source of all their blessings, 164, 165.

I.

- IDOLATRY.—‘If idolatry had not been taken from Israel, Israel would have ‘been lost among the nations,’ 232, 233.
- The worship of Jesus not idolatry, as he is “the mighty God.” “God over all:” but is there no danger, lest the Supreme Being of Antitrinitarians, should be found an Deus rationis, and no more the true God than Baal or Jupiter? 274, 275.
- IMMANUEL, the name of the Virgin's Son, 17.
- IMPOSTOR.—Did ever impostor, having declared, that being put to death, he would rise from the dead, establish his imposture by fulfilling his word? 140.
- INFERIORITY, What kind of, in respect of the persons in the Trinity, Trini-tarians admit; viz. that of sending and being sent, 273.
- INTEND.—‘Did God intend to impose on Israel, and to lay a great stumbling ‘block?’ What say the prophets? 115, 116.
- INTERPRETATION of Isaiah liii. No plausible one yet given, except that of Christians.—Without a satisfactory interpretation of the whole, on some other ground, ours must stand, notwithstanding objections, and detached criticisms, 294.
- ISAIAH, Fiftieth chapter, a prophecy fulfilled in Jesus, which points out the cause of the present rejected state of the Jews, 302, 303.
- the fifty-third chapter. It has been publicly said, that the Jews are forbidden to read it, and this remains, I believe, uncontradicted, 281.
- Some parts of it adduced and explained, 282—289.
- ISRAEL.—“I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel,” 110, 111.
- “Lost sheep of,” far different from ‘the wicked shepherds of,’ 112.
- ‘Was to be made blind;’ ‘was to be made guilty, &c.’—A general stricture on the whole passage, 117.
- The cause of Israel's dispersion, and the termination of it, 117, 118.
- Israel the Messiah, and the Messiah Israel, briefly noticed, 120.

- 'ISRAEL elected king of this world, before it was created.'---Facts have hitherto been irreconcilable with this, 193, 194.
- fulfilled in Christ and the true Israel, 195.
- 'Alone ministers.'---Only the priests and Levites could be stated ministers of religion: but the prophets predict ministers of religion from among the Gentiles, 231, 232.
- Other ministers of religion must be absolutely needful to convert the world, and to the world when converted, 232.
- 'No Israel, no world,' 240.
- The true Israel, 241, 242.

J.

- JANNES AND JAMBRES.—Tradition of the Jews concerning them; and that of Mohammed, that they were converted and martyred by Pharaoh, of equal authority, 124.
- JEHOVAH.—Prophecies, in which One who calls himself JEHOVAH, and speaks the language of Deity, says also, "JEHOVAH hath sent me," 268---270. Compared with some texts in the N. T. 270.
- JEW.—"The Jew first, and also the Gentile."---St. Paul had no reference to the state either of Jew or Gentile in this world, 60.
- 'Jews a blessing to the nations:' quotation from a sermon on this subject, Zech. viii. 20---23., 62.
- Tens of thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands of Jews, brought from a formal, or grossly wicked life, to become spiritual worshippers of God, and holy characters, between the opening of the gospel by John Baptist, and the destruction of Jerusalem: all, the consequence of the coming of Jesus, 67.
- The acknowledged better treatment of Jews in this country than in others, an effect of the coming of Jesus, 69, 70.
- Not illiterate, or uncivilized, when Jesus appeared: and excessively attached to the ceremonies of the law, and the traditions of the elders, 71.
- Not Jews exclusively meant by the apostle, when he says, "as many as are of the works of the law are under a curse," 225---228.
- JOEL, prophecy of, ii. 28---32. considered, 121, 122.
- JOSEPH.—'Messiah, Son of Joseph.' The prophets say nothing of him, 253.

K.

- KEY.—The apostle John's words, (Rev. i. 4---6.) as a key to open Isaiah's prophecy, (liii. 4---6.) 289.—Another similar instance, 299.
- KING.—"Thy King cometh;" Zion's. Mr. C. adds, 'but not of the Gentiles:' yet the Gentiles are mentioned in the next verse, Zech. ix. 9, 10. 98, 99.
- KINGDOM.—Daniel predicted that the Messiah would come under the last of the four great kingdoms: but that he should come, and be cut off, before the desolations of the sanctuary, &c. His final success, not his first coming, is fixed to the time subsequent to the division of the fourth kingdom, 93, 94.

- KINGDOM of the Messiah, whether spiritual or altogether earthly, 156---167
 -----An earthly, and a spiritual kingdom, separately described and distinguished, 161---163.
- “KISS the Son;” what implied, 101.
- KORAN.--The Koran contains the fewest ideas, and is the dullest book, which the author ever read, 91.

L.

- LANGUAGE.--‘When the Messiah comes, all will be of one language.’ This not foretold. Zeph. iii. 9. considered, 64, 65.
 -----Which the prophecies, as fulfilled in Jesus, sometimes suggest to the Jews, 121.
- LAW---of Moses, threefold; moral, ceremonial, and judicial: the two latter, in their grand requirements, have not been observed for ages; nor can be, in the present state of things. The moral law, always spoken of as superior, by the prophets, 142---144. All not perfect, in exactly the same sense, 144, 145.
- NEW AND MITIGATED.--The most general and pernicious of heresies, subverting both law and gospel, 144. Not a new law given, but a new covenant mediated by Jesus Christ, 147, 148.
- The most perfect law is not all that a sinner wants, to make him happy. He wants what no law can give, but the mercy and clemency of the Prince, 149---151.
- “of Christ.” What law is meant? 151.
- “of an ambassador, 169---172.
- Jews cannot obey the ceremonial law: all they can do, forms only mere fragments of a shattered structure, 204.
- ‘Christians boast about a new law; Does it allow them to shed innocent ‘blood?’ Considered, 238, 239.
- LAWGIVER, Meaning of the original word, Gen. xlix. 10. 32, 33. The law-giver has ceased from Judah above 1700 years, 34, 35.
- LAWSUIT, between Jews, Christians, and Mohammedans. No judge but the parties; and of course the Jew decides in favour of Jews: but how will God decide? 90.
- LEADER.---The Messiah predicted as a Leader, 118, 119.
- LENGTHEN.---God does not lengthen the fixed and predicted time, for fulfilling prophecies, nor shorten it, 40.
- LIAR.---‘If any one will say, that man is God, tell him he is a liar,’ 265.
- LONDON SOCIETY, far from any competition with Jews, about the dominion of the world, under the Messiah, 196, 197.
 -----Its object, to make some compensation to Jews, for injuries, committed by nominal Christians, in other ages and places, 239.
- LORD.---David called the Messiah his Lord, above 1000 years before the birth of Jesus: an unanswerable proof of the Messiah’s pre-existence, and of his Deity, 23, 24.

- LORD.—‘Moses the Lord of all the prophets.’ The expression noticed, 126, 127.
- LORD’S DAY, spoken of, in the same manner, as “the Lord’s Supper.” The Christian’s day of sacred rest, 201.
- ‘LOTS cast by the heavenly Sanhedrin,’ ‘and the lot which fell to the portion of God,’ 153, 154.
- LUCK, good, occurs in the Prayer-book version of the Psalms, improperly: but not in our Bibles, 91.

M.

- MADNESS—Cruel oppression drove the Jews to madness, 237, 238.
- MALACHI, ‘The great seal of the O. T.’ His prophecy considered, 218, 219.
- MAN.—Christ being Man, no proof that he is no more than Man, 6, 7. 274.
- ‘If JESUS is Man, he is no God.’ This answered, 15, 16.
- Was the Messiah to be a mere man like other men? 21. Proof to the contrary from many prophecies; and the question decidedly answered in the negative, 21—31.
- MATERIALIZING.—The charge of some Jews, against the doctrine of Christ’s Deity, as materializing the Divine essence, shewn to be entirely groundless, 275, 276.
- MEAN.—‘What doth Paul mean:’ 1 Cor. xv. 28? Answer. 271, 272.
- MELCHISEDEK, only mentioned twice in the O. T. and in the N. only as to the High Priesthood of Christ, 207.
- MERCY AND FORGIVENESS, not from law, but from another source, 225.
- MERIT of fighting for the faith, and of works and prayers, in Mohammed’s religion, 75, 76.
- MESSIAH.—The word used of Rulers, high Priests, and Prophets, 6.
- ‘When is the Messiah to come?’ Full proof from the O. T. that he is already come, 31—47.
- ‘The time of his coming unknown:’ yet Mr. C. attempts to calculate it, 50.
- In fact scarcely any thing is so clearly predicted, Ibid.
- Was the Messiah to have a man, as his immediate father, or not? 16.
- If he was, no previous intimation required. If not, such intimation required, 16, 17.
- Answered in the negative, from Is. vii. 14. Gen. iii. 15. Jer. xxxi. 22. 17—21.
- The Prince, 47.
- ‘The kingdom of, not spiritual, but altogether earthly,’ 156, 157.
- Called expressly God in the O. T. 268.
- See GENTILES.
- MICAH, prophecy is, considered, 254, 255.
- MILLENNIUM.—Many think it will begin 6000 years after the creation, 51.
- The word not found in scripture. The reign of the Messiah not limited to it, 198, 199.

- ‘MIRACLES of Jesus, how a Jew will account for them?’ 122.
- ‘are a poor and miserable defence,’ 122.
- ‘The wise men of Pharaoh performed the same miracles which Moses did.’ Disproved, 122, 123.
- ‘Are no proof of a Divine mission.’ Some questions started on this position, 123.
- ‘To drive out devils is no miracle at all; common men could do it; Considered, 123, 124.
- Few undeniable miracles wrought publickly before powerful enemies, and challenging investigation, in support of an unestablished religion, are recorded in history. Those of Moses and those of Jesus and his apostles, nearly, if not quite, the whole on record, 125, 141.
- Some of Jesus’s compared with some recorded in O. T. 125.
- Those of awful judgments alone, rendered Israel submissive to Moses, even after established as a prophet, 129.
- How far and in what cases miracles are the proof of a Divine mission? 131.
- Bad men have wrought real miracles, 131.
- and apparent miracles, by legerdemain and Satanical influence, 131, 132.
- Cases in which what appear to us real miracles, do not prove a Divine mission, 132, 133.
- Not the only support of Christianity, which perfects, instead of subverting, the religion delivered by Moses, 133. And has in this respect an advantage, as the latter rests more entirely on miracles, 133, 134.
- Two miracles, mentioned by Mr. C. wrought not by Moses, but long after, 134.
- Had Moses gone to Pharaoh, without miracles, he could not have succeeded, 134, 135.
- Difference between the miracles of Moses, and those of the magicians, 135.
- Moses and the sacred writers always appeal to the miracles wrought, 135, 136.
- There are other proofs, besides miracles, of the mission of Moses; and still stronger to that of Jesus: but without miracles, these proofs would never have been noticed, 136, 137.
- Benign nature of the miracles of Jesus: as easy at least, to strike the living dead, as to raise the dead to life, 138.
- The peculiar miracles of Jesus predicted by the prophets, concerning the Messiah, 138.
- Divine attestations to the greatest of the miracles of Jesus, even his own resurrection, 139.
- Are in general a proof of a Divine mission: as the Jews, in the days of Jesus and his apostles, felt and allowed, 140, 141.
- Popish, heathen, and Mohammedan miracles, in proof of a religion already established: not publick, nor challenging investigation, 141, 142.

MIRACLES.—Mohammed's difficulties about miracles, 87.

————— When wrought by a Jew, in behalf of Israel, not 'a poor defence.' 241.

————— 'To be wrought all over the earth, at the restoration of Israel,' 257.
MISQUOTATION of Is. lxi. 1. noticed, 257, 258.

'MOHAMMEDANS, more numerous, than Christians,' 70. As circumcised, they are all competitors with Israel, as to the great seal of circumcision, 253.

————— Were all men consistent Mohammedans, what would be their character? Were all men consistent Christians, what their character? 82.

MOHAMMED.—His triumphs compared and contrasted with those of Jesus, 70—90.

————— The state of the adjacent countries, and the character of the age, in which Mohammed succeeded, contrasted with the countries and the character of the age, in which Christianity was established, 71—74.

————— Neither he nor his successors exhibited their religion before men capable of investigating its claims, and daring to do it, 73, 74.

————— Nature of the religion which Mohammed, and which Jesus established, contrasted, 74—83.

————— Means, by which Jesus, and by which Mohammed, obtained success, contrasted, 83—90.

————— always mars, or pollutes, what he adduces from the O. T. 91.

MOHAMMEDISM, with the superficial, who are a vast majority, the most specious rival of Christianity on earth, 89, 90.

MONVES, son of king Agrippa, and cut off with him: the author cannot find out any thing about him, 49, 50.

MORALITY of Mohammedism, very lax and slight, and sparingly treated of, 77.

MOSES.—'When Moses was sent to Israel, they believed him.'—What say Moses and the prophets on this subject? 112—114.

MOTION.—Mohammed had great difficulty in setting his machine in motion: but that once fully effected, every thing combined to urge it forward; and Omnipotence alone could stop its progress, 79.

MYSTERY.—The time of the Messiah's coming, no hidden mystery, 50.

MYSTERIES.—Those relating to original sin, the person of Christ, the Trinity, redemption, regeneration, &c. wholly excluded from Mohammedism, which in these respects nearly resembles Socinianism, 74.

N.

NAME of God; the "little Sanctuary," Ez. xi. 16. 202.

———— One Name, one God three Persons, is our doctrine, 281.

NATIONS, in the country where Mohammed established his religion by the sword, were at that time divided, enfeebled, and incapable of effectual resistance, 72, 73.

—————"All nations before JEHOVAH are as nothing." Is Israel to be excepted? 242.

NATIONS.—‘It is not said “Rejoice all ye nations;” Deut. xxxii. 36. but some, ‘those who never troubled Israel.’ Assyria and Egypt are mentioned by Isaiah with special favour, (Is. xix. 23—25:) did they never trouble Israel? 245.

—————All nations are mentioned in other prophecies, Ibid.

NATURE, distinct, of the religion which Mohammed, and of that which Jesus, established, 74—83.

NEED.—What we “sinners of the Gentiles” need from the Messiah, 250, 251.

—————The Jews need the same, though not aware of it, 251.

NOTHING.—‘The word of God came to nothing,’ answered, 116.

NUMBER of Mohammedans, supposed to exceed that of Christians, 70.

O.

OBLATIONS, Legal, virtually ceased, when Jesus expired, 43, 44.

OFFERING FOR SIN.—“Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin.” Who is meant? 291.

OLD TESTAMENT.—Have we no ground in it, to maintain, that the promised Messiah, when he came, would be despised, hated, persecuted, and put to death, by the people and rulers, as a malefactor; but as a Sacrifice for sin, in the judgment of God? 306.

OMISSIONS; those of Mr. C. must be noticed, and the subjects omitted considered, 281.

OPINION, of the approaching conversion and restoration of the Jews, grows more and more general among studious Christians, 164, 165.

OPINIONS.—Some opposed in controversy, which it seems difficult to believe were ever maintained. Rom. ii. 17—24. One similar in Mr. C. 229, 230.

ORAL LAW, or traditions, considered, 214—221.

—————It is now written and commented on in thirteen folios! 216.

—————No hope of convincing Jews, till driven from the entrenchments of the oral law, 217.

—————Moses, Joshua, and other receivers of the oral law, say nothing of it; but much to the contrary, 217, 218.

—————‘Each receiver of it, is as God in his age.’ Who is then the present receiver? or Who was the last? 219.

—————Now no secret, 231.

OUGHT.—‘God ought to have given the law to all of them.’—We should enquire what we ought to do, not prescribe what God ought to do, 151.

P.

PAIRING the nations, and pairing Israel and the Sabbath. considered, 197, 198.

PATRONS, angels of this or the other country, 152, 153.

PAUL.—Attempt to prove from Paul, that the Messiah is not come; from him, who spent and laid down his life, in testifying that Jesus was the Messiah!

PAUL.—His words (Rom. xi. 32.) accord with those of the prophets, 116.

PERFECTION, absolute and relative, distinguished, 145.

PERSECUTION and oppression: both nominal Christians and Jews deeply criminal in this respect, 244.

PHYSICIAN.—“The whole need not a physician:” but many think themselves whole who are not, 251.

PIERCED.—“They pierced my hands and my feet,” a prophecy of Jesus, 297, 298.

PIN.—The improvement of a story, compared to the making of a pin, 216.

“PINE AWAY in iniquities.” Has not this been the case with Israel, ever since they crucified Jesus? 54, 55.

PLACE.—Probably, by ‘a kingdom altogether earthly,’ Mr. C. meant the place, in which the Messiah would reign, 168.

POLYGAMY, and concubinage, allowed, as far as the licentious could desire, by Mohammed, 77.

PORTION.—“I will divide him a portion with the great, because he poured out his soul into death, &c.” 292—294.

PREACHER.—‘The Messiah not a Preacher.’ Answered, 175, 176.

PRECEDENCY, “in tribulation and anguish” at the day of judgment, given to wicked Jews, the meaning of the apostle (Rom. ii. 9.) 243—245.

PREDESTINATION.—How held by Mohammed, 76.

PRE-EXISTENCE of the Messiah. clearly stated by Micah, 22.

PRIDEAUX (Dean) Quotation from him, concerning the ‘oral law,’ 215, 216.

PRIEST.—The Messiah predicted as a Priest, 6.

———— A Priest after the order of Melchisedek; which, as the Son of David, he could not be, without disannulling the ceremonial law. The reasoning of St. Paul on this subject, (Heb. vii.) absolutely unanswerable, 205, 206.

———— Whether the Messiah should be a priest or not? one of Mr. C.’s omissions, 281.

PRIESTS AND LEVITES.—In what sense could God take of the Israelites, to be priests and Levites? (Is. lxvi. 21.) The tribe of Levi and the family of Aaron were such already; and those of other tribes could not be substituted or added, according to the law, 260.

“POOR of the flock,” who would attend to the Messiah, distinguished by the prophet from the rest of the nation, 112.

PROPHECIES.—Mr. C. explains several unfulfilled prophecies, nearly as some Christian expositors do; whether aright or not the author does not determine, 252, 253.

———— Such as have been already fulfilled are our proper study: the unfulfilled replete with difficulty, 263, 264.

PROPHECY.—The author does not attempt to prophesy from the prophecies, 209, 252.

“PROPHET like unto Moses,” 210, 211, 220, 221.

———— Jesus proved to be a Prophet, as predicting future events, respecting Jerusalem, as "trodden under foot of the Gentiles" to this day; and various other things, far more explicitly and particularly, than in the ancient prophets. Now, if in this sense a Prophet, then the Messiah. This the Jews feel, 120—122. 213, 214.

PROPHETS. 'Thus became a whole nation, in one moment, prophets.' This directly contradicts the history, (Num. xi.) 129, 130.

————— Whether a prophet be superior to a high priest? 210, 211.

PSALM, Forty-fourth. By whom written, and of whom? 243.

————— Second.—What events does it predict? Does it not clearly indicate mercy to the Gentiles? 246.

————— Twenty-second, begins and proceeds to the end, in language which never did and never can, throughout, suit any one except Jesus, whose "sufferings, and the glory that followed," it most particularly foretels, 296—302.

————— No confession of sin in it, as in the other Psalms composed by David in his afflictions, 296.

————— Sixty-ninth, some of it considered, 302.

PURGATORY in Mohammedism, 75.

PURPOSE.—'Israel would not receive Christ: to what purpose was he sent?' Answered by some other questions. The tendency of this species of reasoning, 114, 115.

Q.

QUESTION.—The question to be debated in this publication is, 'WHETHER THE MESSIAH, PREDICTED IN THE O. T. BE ALREADY COME, OR NOT?' 5.

————— What have been the effects of the coming of Jesus, on the state of the world, including Jews and Gentiles? 65--70.

————— How far, and in what cases, miracles are a proof of a Divine mission? 131--142.

————— For what purposes, Israel and the Gentiles need a Messiah? 248—251.

QUOTATION, remarkable, from a Jew in the eleventh century, on the long continued wrath of God against the Jews, and the cause of it, 34, 35.

R.

REALITY.—Mr. C. intimates no doubt, as to the reality of the miracles recorded in the N. T. but ascribes them, as the Pharisees of old did, to enchantment, 130, 131.

REASON.—'The Jews had a good reason,' that is, for 'murdering their wives, 'and children, and themselves!' The conduct of prophets and martyrs contrasted with this, 237, 238.

RECEIVER.—'Each receiver' (of the oral law,) 'as good in his age as Moses.' How is this consistent, with there being no other prophet like unto Moses? 220, 221.

RECEPTION.—The reception, with which the prophets foretold, the Messiah would meet from his nation, 282—286.

- REDEEMER.—The Messiah allowed to be called a Redeemer; a term at least as appropriate to JEHOVAH, as a Saviour, 14.
- RELIGION.—All the true religion now in the world, at least among Gentiles, is the effect of the coming of Jesus, 69, 70.
- REPORT.—‘The nations shall see the glory of Israel, and will cry out, “Who hath believed our report?”’ How could the Gentiles call this our report? The only notice in Mr. C.’s book of Is. liii. 260.
- RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.—The title of Mr. C.’s book creates a difficulty to the answerer; as he firmly believes “the Restoration of Israel,” 5.
- Opinion of studious Christians respecting it, 164, 165.
- Not once in the O. T. connected immediately with the coming of the Messiah; but generally with Israel’s conversion from iniquity and ungodliness, 53, 54. 158, 159.
- The coming of the Messiah often connected with predictions of judgments on the Jews: the Restoration uniformly with spiritual blessings, 158, 159.
- RESTORED ISRAEL, according to the prophets, will speak the language, not of boasting and self-preference, but of deep humility and self-loathing, 234, 235.
- REVERSED.—The order of the history, in Exodus, reversed by Mr. C. to prove his point. The whole passage adduced. with remarks on it, 127, 128.
- RESURRECTION OF JESUS. proved by the most overwhelming accumulation of human testimony, established by the indisputable testimony of God himself, 139, 140.
- Predictions in the O. T. of the Messiah’s resurrection, 306—308.
- REVIVAL of learning, at the time of Luther’s reformation, stayed the progress of Mohammedism, 74.
- RICH.—“His grave with the wicked; with the rich in his death,” (Is. liii. 9.) The Christian interpretation, 290, 291.
- RUDDER.—‘The world a ship: Israel the rudder!’ 198.

S.

- SABBATH.—Views of Christians, as to its obligations; and thoughts on the day on which it is observed, 199—202.
- Whether a type of the Millennium? 202.
- SACRIFICES.—Are atonement sacrifices, according to the law of Moses, offered by the Jews at present? Especially, are the legal sacrifices offered on the great day of atonement? 203.
- spiritual, if offered, cannot prove, that the ritual law is not abrogated, or rendered impracticable, 203.
- SANCTUARIES.—(Lev. xxvi. 31.) Mr. C. translates the word temples, and supposes the first and the second temple to be meant. This considered, 54.
- SANHEDRIN, Heavenly. All spoken of it a mere fable, 152, 153.
- SAVIOUR.—‘The Messiah not called a Saviour by Zechariah,’ (ix. 9) Yet his prediction of great importance in the argument, 12, 13.

- SAVIOUR.—The original word for Saviour, used of others besides JEHOVAH; and belongs to the Messiah, 13, 14.
- as in some respect, the Jews themselves admit, 14.
- SCATTERED, not an appropriate word, for an orderly allotment of the earth among seventy families, 152.
- SCÉPTRE.—Meaning of the word (Gen. xlix. 10.) fixed, 31, 32. It cannot mean rod of correction, in this connection, 35, 36.
- The Scéptre has departed from Judah above 1700 years; therefore Shiloh is come, 34, 35.
- SEAL and crown, circumcision, 193.
- SECOND DEATH;—a N. T. expression. Where and how used, 277, 278.
- SEED.—‘The seed is of the father, and not of the mother,’ say the Jews; and, as far as appears, there is only one exception to this in the O. T. viz. “The Seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent’s head.” This an intimation that the predicted Messiah would not have an human father, 19, 20.
- After the person predicted, (Is. liii.) had been “cut off from the land of the living; made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death, &c.,” it is subjoined, “He shall see his seed, and prolong his days, &c.” How can this be, except he arise, as Jesus did? and live, as he does? 292.
- “A seed shall serve him, ~~enrolled~~ in the Christian church, 301.
- SEPARATED.—Israel separated for ever from the nations, 209, 210.
- SEPTUAGINT.—This translation excludes the ass and ass’s colt, from Zechariah’s prophecy of the Messiah, 12.
- Our translators of the Bible, perhaps, paid too much deference to the Septuagint, in adding all, Deut. xxvii. 26. but are not deserving of Mr. C.’s harsh censure, 227, 228.
- SERMONS.—Wonderful and shocking preached by the cruelly oppressed Jews, 237, 238.
- SEVENTY.—‘Abraham was seventy years of age, when God entered into covenant with him.’—Abram was seventy-five, when he left Haran to go to Canaan; and ninety-nine, when the covenant made with him was sealed by circumcision, 208.
- WEEKS in Daniel, whence to be dated, how divided, and when terminated, 41—43.
- FAMILIES of Noah, not easily made out, 151, 152.
- See COEWEB.
- SHEPHERD.—All spiritual blessings, according to the O. T. as well as the N. T. comprised in this one title of the Messiah, 160.
- “My Shepherd, the Man that is my fellow.” “Smite the Shepherd, &c.” This fully proves, that the Messiah would be made a Sacrifice for sin, by the sword of Divine justice, 305, 306.
- SHILOH, acknowledged in the Talmud and Targums to be the Messiah, 33.
- See SCÉPTRE.
- SIGN.—“No sign shall be given you, but that of the prophet Jonas,” 125, 126.

- SIGN.—A Virgin bearing a Son is predicted as a sign, or miraculous token of favour to the house of David, given by JEHOVAH himself, 17.
- SIGNS, which Moses was empowered to shew, were publick miracles, that the people might believe, 127, 128.
- SIMILITUDE OF JEHOVAH.—(Num. xii. 8.) Who or what is meant? 30.
- SIN AND MISERY do exist: yet God, infinite in power and goodness, could have prevented it. This the grand difficulty, which attaches to all religions alike, 66.
- SLANDERS.—Much cruel injury done to the Jews by slanders. A question, however, is grounded on this concession, 239.
- SON OF MAN.—Jesus certainly claimed also to be “the Son of God,” and was crucified for that claim, 15, 16.
- SPIRITUAL kingdom, the nature of, distinguished from an earthly one, 161, 162.
- BLESSINGS, a summary of, 162, 163.
- Every prediction of the Messiah, from Gen. iii. 15. to Mal. iv. 2. connects spiritual blessings with Messiah’s reign, 165.
- The controversy of no consequence, unless Messiah confer spiritual and eternal blessings, 166, 167.
- STATE of the Jews, at the birth of Jesus, as to religion, deplorable, 66.
- That of the Gentiles, 66, 67.
- “STANDARD BEARERS—of the Spirit, when the enemy came in like a flood,” the different Societies, 86.
- STONE, little, becoming “a great mountain, and filling the whole earth.” The Messiah is not mentioned in it, nor could his coming be proved from it, apart from other prophecies. It is explained to mean “a kingdom, “which God will set up,” and evidently by gradual increase, (Dan. ii. 34, 35. 44, 45.) 97.
- SUCCESSOR.—“Not to him,” “to the Messiah no successor.” (Dan. ix. 26.) This suits Jesus, as well as “not for himself” does, 48.
- SUPEREROGATION, Works of, intimated by Mohammed, 75, 76.

T.

- TEMPLE.—“The Lord shall come to his temple,—even the Messenger” (or Angel) “of the covenant, &c.” (Mal. iii. 1.) To whom did the temple belong? Who is this “Angel of the covenant?” 38, 39.
- TEMPESTS.—“Moses would command one of his tempests.” This compared with scripture, 92.
- TEMPORAL good things, what are really such, promised to Christians: but the things which worldly men most crave, are excluded from the list, 162.
- TESTAMENT.—All approved characters, in the O. T. sought acceptance with God, as sinner, from his mercy, by faith. They were conscious of deeply needing forgiveness, 225.
- TRADITIONS.—Our Lord taught his disciples to obey the laws of Moses, but to refuse obedience to the traditions of the Elders, 217.
- Those of most nations, and even of the Jewish Talmud, contain intimations of plurality in unity in the Godhead. Christians did not invent the doctrine, 271.
- TRANSLATORS of the Bible defended, with a tribute of due respect to them, 228.

- THREE.—Divine perfections and operations, are ascribed, in scripture, to the Father, to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit. Yet there is only “one living and true God.”—Hence we say, “These Three are One.” Three persons and One Deity, 278.
- THRONE.—A throne on earth cannot be for ever and ever, (Ps. xlv. 6.) 163.
- TITLE of the Gentiles, 242.
- “TIMES of the Gentiles,” 57—60.
- TOKEN.—“The token.—(Ex. iii. 12.) a private sign to Moses, not mentioned afterwards, 127, 128.
- TRANSGRESSORS.—“He was numbered with the transgressors, he bare the “sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.” (Is. liii. 12.) What other interpretation of these words can stand a competition with that of Christians? 293.
- TREE OF LIFE.—‘As the days of the tree of life.’ Thus Mr. C. quotes Is. lxxv. 24. What is meant by ‘the days of the tree of life?’ What ‘tree of life?’ 264.
- TRIFLING, egregious, in matters of eternal salvation, or damnation, 90.
- TRINITY.—The objections of the Jews shew, that this is undeniably the doctrine of the N. T. but it is also found in the O. T. 265—272. Mr. C.’s arguments against it by no means formidable, 266.
- See WONDERFUL.
- TRUSTS.—He who trusts in man is cursed, (Job xxvii. 5, 6;) but he who trusts in “the Son,” the Messiah, is blessed, (Ps. ii. 12.) 268.
- U.
- USE.—‘Of what use was the coming of Jesus?’ ‘Of no use.’ &c. 65. Answered, 65—70.
- It had not this use, to give the Jews their desired dominion over the nations, 70.
- Of what use, were the miracles of Moses to Pharaoh, and that generation of Israel, which fell in the wilderness? 128, 129.
- V.
- VAIN.—The hopes of a temporal Messiah, and an earthly kingdom, vain and empty. What real good could such a Messiah do to dying men? 196, 197.
- VESTURE.—“Upon my vesture they cast lots.” (Ps. xxii. 18.) The exact fulfilment of this when Jesus was crucified, 298, 299.
- VIRGIN.—Was not the Almighty able to make a virgin the mother of a Son? And was he not able to prove this Son of a virgin, to be descended from the ancestors of that virgin? 10.
- Isaiah’s prophecy concerning “a Virgin bearing a Son,” considered, and the Christian interpretation established, 17—19.
- Some other clear and satisfactory interpretation of the whole passage must be adduced, or our interpretation must stand, 19.
- W.
- WILDERNESS.—‘Why the law given in one,’ 197.
- WINE.—How forbidden by Mohammed.—Delicious wines an enjoyment of his heaven, 77.
- WISDOM “brought forth before the mountains, brought up with ГЕНОВАН, “&c.” (Prov. viii. 22—31.) 29, 30.

'WITNESS of the gospel,' that Christ was 'not the Messiah,' 63. The absurdity of making the gospel testify against that which is the grand subject of it, 64.

WOMAN.—“The Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, a woman shall “compass a man,” Jer. xxxi. 22. adduced in proof that the Messiah would have no human father, 20, 21.

WOMEN.—The women of this world almost overlooked by Mohammed, in his view of heaven, 78.

'WONDERFUL sermons,' 237, 238.

—————Why should the Child's name, predicted by Isaiah (ix. 6, 7.) be called WONDERFUL; if there were nothing uncommon, or peculiarly wonderful respecting him? 25.

—————The belief of the Trinity, (if not the doctrine of scripture,) to the extent and degree, in which it has been believed; by the persons, who have believed it; and amidst circumstances suited to subvert every Antiscriptural tenet, &c. is the most wonderful fact in the world, 278—280.

—————The Author's case, in respect of this doctrine, 280.

WORDS AND WORKS, of Jesus, and of the Holy Spirit, in many respects spoken of, as one and the same, 274.

WORSHIP.—‘The true worship’ very different from ‘a new religion.’ 65.

—————All acceptable worship by Israel of old. had reference to the tabernacle and temple. the sacrifices, the ark, and the mercy-seat, &c. 203, 204.

—————‘of Israel will continue for ever and ever.’ Considered, 255.

Y.

YES.—‘God said yes, but I, Israel, said no.’ Did Israel's saying no, prove that God did not say yes? 114.

Z.

ZECHARIAH.—His prophecy of Zion's king, entering Jerusalem, riding on an ass's colt, (ix. 9, 10,) examined; and compared with the history of Jesus, 11—14.

—————That in viii. 20—23, considered, 60, 61.

—————“They shall look upon me whom they have pierced,” (xii. 10.) a prophecy of Jesus, as crucified, 304.

—————“Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, &c.” (xiii. 7.) And the subsequent predictions considered, 304—306.

ZELOPHEHAD.—Jesus proved to be “the Son of David,” in the same manner as a son of Zelophehad's daughter, might be proved the descendant of Zelophehad, 7, 8.

ERRATA.

P. 22. Ref. * for 2 John i. 1—14. read John i. 1, 2, 14. P. 79. l. 25. between ourselves and explained, read is. P. 81. l. 1. between us and to will, read both. P. 97. l. 28. for l. 11. read l. 9—11. P. 98. l. 19. after many, omit of the. P. 106. l. 26. for undescribable, read undesirable. P. 120. l. 12. for Menwes, read Monves.

1 1012 01009 5950